What Is On My Ballot?

Empowering Voters

The Midterms are Coming!

September 2026 marks another important step forward for What Is On My Ballot as we begin reaching out to politicians as part of our ongoing efforts to promote voter education and civic engagement. As we continue preparing for the midterm elections, establishing communication with political leaders and candidates is an opportunity to explore ways to help voters access useful information and become more familiar with the people seeking to represent them.

Beginning this outreach is particularly timely as we continue preparing for the midterm elections. The election season offers an opportunity to remind people of the importance of researching their ballots before election day. We encourage voters to learn which offices will appear on their ballots, understand the responsibilities associated with those offices, and seek information from reliable sources. Taking time to prepare can help make the voting process less overwhelming and support more thoughtful participation.

As we continue contacting politicians, we hope to develop productive opportunities that align with our commitment to voter education and nonpartisan civic engagement. We look forward to sharing additional updates as this work progresses and as we identify new ways to help voters become better informed.
