A DIFFERENCE IN A DAY GUIDE

THE HOME REFRESH ROADMAP

A 15-minute guided reflection to help you see where your home is supporting your life,
and where it may be asking for a plan.

Most people own a home.

Very few have a plan for it.

STRATEGIC HOME GUIDANCE FOR HOMEOWNERS WHO WANT TO SELL WITH CONFIDENCE OR STAY WITH INTENTION.

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

Homes evolve alongside the lives lived inside them. Families grow, priorities shift, children leave, aging parents arrive, and eventually many homeowners begin thinking about what comes next. Yet most people move through these changes without a clear strategy for their home. Improvements happen reactively. Projects are delayed. Decisions are made emotionally. Upgrades often happen only when it is finally time to sell.

As a result, many homeowners find themselves asking the same question:

Why did we wait until now?

This short exercise is designed to help you see your home with fresh eyes, not just how it looks, but how it feels, how it functions, and whether it still supports the life you are living now.

THIS IS NOT A RENOVATION CHECKLIST

It is a clarity tool. You are not deciding everything today.

You are simply noticing what your home has been trying to tell you.

HOW TO USE IT

Give yourself 15 quiet minutes. Walk slowly. Write what comes up first.
Try not to explain it away. The honest first answer is often the most useful one.

PART 1: THE DRIVEWAY MOMENT

Before you enter your home, pause in the driveway or at the curb. This is the first impression your home gives you and is often the first place homeowners start disconnecting from what needs attention.

When I pull into the driveway, my first feeling is:

[ ] Proud
[ ] Neutral
[ ] Embarrassed
[ ] Uninspired
[ ] Calm
[ ] Overwhelmed
[ ] Frustrated
[ ] Relieved to be home

The first thing I notice is:

The thing I try not to notice is:

If someone was arriving for the first time, I would hope they notice:

If I could improve one thing about the exterior or arrival experience, it would be:

PART 2: THE FRONT DOOR & ENTRY

Your entry is a transition point. It sets the tone for how your home receives people, including you. It can feel welcoming and organized, or it can quietly add friction every time you come through the door.

As I approach the front door, the space feels:

[ ] Welcoming
[ ] Cluttered
[ ] Dated
[ ] Unfinished
[ ] Tired
[ ] Bare
[ ] Functional
[ ] Not reflective of us

When I step inside, the first thing I see is:

That first view makes me feel:

This area works well because:

This area does not work well because:

NOTICE THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN APPEARANCE AND FUNCTION

Sometimes an entry looks fine in a photo but does not support real life.

Sometimes it functions well but does not feel like the right introduction to the home.

PART 3: THE ROOMS THAT FEEL NOT QUITE RIGHT

Every home has spaces we learn to work around. A room may be beautiful but impractical. It may be useful but draining. It may simply no longer match the way your household lives today. Walk through your main living areas and notice where your body or mood changes. Where do you pause? Where do you rush? Where do you feel irritated, tired, cramped, or unsure?

The room or area that feels most off right now is:

The feeling I have in this room is:

[ ] Restless
[ ] Overstimulated
[ ] Uninspired
[ ] Disconnected
[ ] Crowded
[ ] Calm, but unfinished

[ ] Stuck
[ ] Uncomfortable
[ ] Frustrated
[ ] Avoidant
[ ] Heavy
[ ] Good, but not complete

This room is not working because:

PART 4: WHAT THE ROOM IS ASKING FOR

Once you have named the room, look closer. The goal is not to solve the whole space immediately. The goal is to understand what kind of problem it actually is.
This room mostly needs:

[ ] Better layout
[ ] Less clutter
[ ] More light
[ ] Updated finishes
[ ] Better furniture placement
[ ] A practical repair
[ ] Better storage
[ ] More warmth
[ ] Better scale or proportion
[ ] Clearer purpose
[ ] A stronger first impression
[ ] A full rethink

What I keep trying to fix with small purchases or quick changes is:

What I probably need to decide first is:

SMALL UPDATES WORK BEST WHEN THEY ARE CONNECTED TO A BIGGER PLAN

Without a plan, even good purchases can become expensive distractions.

PART 5: THE REPEATING PATTERNS

Now look back at your notes. Most home frustrations are not isolated. The same issue often shows up in several rooms. This is where clarity starts to become strategy.

The pattern I notice most is:

[ ] We need better function
[ ] We need more warmth
[ ] We have unfinished decisions
[ ] We are avoiding a bigger project
[ ] We need better flow
[ ] We need less visual clutter
[ ] We have outdated elements
[ ] We are unsure where to start

The same frustration shows up in these areas:

The decision we have been delaying is:

The reason we have delayed it is probably:

PART 6: SOONER, NOT JUST SOMEDAY

Many homeowners make their best improvements right before selling. They paint. They repair. They simplify. They improve curb appeal. They finally address the spaces that have bothered them for years. The question is not whether those changes matter. They usually do. The better question is whether some of them could have been made sooner, while you were still living in and enjoying the home.

A change I would enjoy now, not just before selling, is:

If this change were already done, daily life would feel:

If I did nothing for another year, this area would likely feel:

A HOME PLAN IS NOT ABOUT DOING EVERYTHING AT ONCE

It is about knowing what matters, what can wait, and what would make the biggest difference first.

PART 7: YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Use this page to choose one clear starting point. The best first priority usually sits at the intersection of emotional impact, practical function, and realistic effort.

My top three areas of concern are:

Of those, the one that affects daily life the most is:

The one that affects the overall impression of the home most is:

The one I am most ready to address is:

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Start with the space or decision that would create the most clarity, not necessarily the biggest project, the most expensive upgrade, or the most visible change.

YOUR HOME CLARITY SNAPSHOT

Complete this summary using your notes. This is your starting point, a simple snapshot of what your home may need next.

Right now, my home mostly feels:

The area that needs the most attention is:

The deeper issue is likely:

[ ] Function
[ ] Storage
[ ] Lighting
[ ] Curb appeal
[ ] Lack of clear purpose
[ ] Aesthetic disconnect
[ ] Flow
[ ] Layout
[ ] Finish updates
[ ] Decision overwhelm
[ ] Deferred maintenance
[ ] Planning for the next season

The next right step is probably:

One sentence that describes the plan I need is:

WHEN YOU NEED MORE THAN A LIST

A checklist can tell you what to do. Strategy helps you understand why it matters, what order to do it in, and how each decision connects to the way you live now, or the way you want your home to present when it is time to sell. If this exercise helped you see something more clearly, but you are still unsure what to do next, that is where strategic home guidance can make the biggest difference. Difference in a Day helps homeowners make focused, intentional decisions about their homes, inside and out.

This may include:

1. Prioritizing updates before selling.
2. Improving curb appeal and first impressions.
3. Rethinking a room that is not functioning well.
4. Clarifying what to change and what to leave alone.
5. Making design decisions with resale and livability in mind.
6. Creating a realistic path forward.

STRATEGY FIRST. DESIGN SECOND. AND RESULTS ALWAYS.

The goal is not to change everything. The goal is to change the right things, in the right order, for the right reason.

READY FOR A CLEARER NEXT STEP?

Whether you are preparing to sell or trying to make your current home work better, your next step should not start with guessing.

Start with a focused conversation about what feels stuck, what needs attention, and what would make the biggest difference.

FOR HOMEOWNERS STAYING IN THEIR HOME

A Home Strategy Session or Remote Home Strategy can help you clarify what's not working, what needs to be redesigned, refreshed, or simplified — and how to move forward with intention.

FOR HOMEOWNERS PREPARING TO SELL

A Pre-Listing Strategy Session can help you identify the updates, edits, staging choices, and curb appeal improvements that matter most before your home goes to market.

Begin with clarity. Then make the changes that matter.
