HEALTH CANADA PROPOSES TO REMOVE BROMINATED VEGETABLE OILS FROM THE LIST OF PERMITTED FOOD ADDITIVES

Informing you of important documents that affect your labelling strategies

Health Canada (HC) has proposed to remove brominated vegetable oils (BVO), a density adjusting agent/clouding agent, from the List of Permitted Food Additives with Other Accepted Uses.

HC recently conducted a safety assessment of BVO and has not identified an immediate health concern. They have concluded that the assessment would not support BVO continuing to be permitted for use as a food food additive.

"Health Canada considers it appropriate to provide a one-year transition period to allow impacted beverages to be reformulated and relabelled, since the updated safety assessment did not find an immediate health concern with the current permitted use of BVO as a food additive. All requirements related to the current permitted use of BVO as a food additive will continue to apply until the end of the transition period." The proposed modification would come into effect on the date is published in the 'List of permitted food additives with other accepted uses'.
