Christopher Davis, founding principal of GoBlock USA, has spent more than 30 years directing, designing and implementing warehouse operations across e-commerce, manufacturing, retail replenishment and wholesale distribution. Today, Chris applies that experience to work with growing consumer products companies, modernize their warehouse operations, and deliver measurable business results. The idea for Atlanta-based GoBlock emerged in 2018, when Chris worked on some of the largest multi-channel warehouse implementations at the time. Although the technology functioned, the operators and processes were not prepared to use the automation. For Chris, the experience exposed an industry increasingly focused on selling equipment rather than delivering business outcomes.

As Chris says, “Companies think they're buying warehouse automation. They’re actually buying a business outcome.” So, he founded GoBlock USA to offer an alternative: an experienced, independent and vendor-neutral partner working on the client’s side of the table. GoBlock sells neither equipment nor software. Instead, it works with organizations to define the business problem, build the business case, implement the right solution, and ensure the investment achieves a measurable ROI.

A Certified Supply Chain Professional (CSCP), Chris has been named among Supply & Demand Chain Executive’s Pros to Know and is a frequent industry speaker. GoBlock has been recognized by Logistics Tech Outlook, and his work featured on the cover of Modern Materials Handling.
