BELMONT COUNTY, OH - On Wednesday, law enforcement released details of a murder-suicide on New Year's Day outside of St. Clairsville. It turns out, authorities had paid a visit to the home just weeks before the fatalities. Police responded to a home on Garrett Hill Road on around 4:30 p.m. on Jan. 1. Chief Deputy James Zusack of the Belmont County Sheriff's Office says 53-year-old Barry Killeen called his daughter to say he had just shot his wife -- and her mother -- and 46-year-old Stephanie Killeen. Killeen's daughter called 911, activating the sheriff's office special operations branch. Authorities had just arrived at the house when they heard a single shot and discovered the bodies. Zusack says an earlier call to the home weeks prior ended without incident. "We were there about a month ago," Zusack said. "He was there by himself in the residence, making threats and to us -- law enforcement -- but eventually we did make contact with him and it ended peacefully. This was a tragic situation something that we have to deal with. Our hearts go out to the family members."
