

Highway Snobbery

The Highway Code is changing,
As I hope you're all aware,
Those cyclists can ride two abreast,
Without a flippin' care.

When pedalling on their tod,
In the road centre they can trail,
And give two fingers to the driver,
Crawling behind them like a snail.

If lycrad pedallers are ranked so high,
It's only right that they should pay,
A tax to use our crowded roads,
To recognise they hold such sway.

And you may find surprising,
The new door opening mystique,
Car drivers are to be advised,
"Use the 'Dutch reach' technique."

This is not a move in the Kama Sutra,
It's to get a better sight,
You grasp the driver's door handle,
With your left hand not your right.

But undertaking a horse on its left,
Will be a banned manoeuvre,
At no more than ten miles per hour,
You must be a right-side cruiser.

Walkers, cyclists and riders top the list,
Of those most favoured by this code,
And the poor old car driver,
Must pay for them to use the road.
