

Has gay marriage led us to incest?

Years ago in response to the approval of gay marriage I predicted there would be the aunt/nephew, grandfather/granddaughter relationships that would test the boundaries of societal norms. Well now the release of the movie "Yellow" has brought this topic to the forefront.

Gay marriage is in essence sex and gratification of one's desire. It is not about procreating children. That is not to say there is no real love between the partners.

With that said, then there should be no issue of incest. The same definition can be applied as in gay marriage. If a brother and sister share a mutual desire, or two brothers or two sisters, then society should not be offended.

If one is "born gay", who is to say one is not "born incestuous". They should have the same freedom to express their love as well as the gay couple.

But where does this stop? Is pedophilia next? Is bestiality on the horizon? Does it matter how one relates to another. It used to matter.

Somewhere this country has lost its moral compass in the goal to be inclusive. Now everyone will shout me down as a bigot, perhaps they are right. This inclusivity of all behavior that is against tradition and moral norms is actually an affront to the majority of Christians, Jews and Muslims. But, they are shouted down by a minority that wields super-status that exalts their beliefs and practices over the majority.

Let's be clear. Nobody cares, or should care, what two consenting adults deem the best road for themselves to get through life. They should just not expect exceptional significance.
