

Rought Thought # Bathrooms are not functional – Tubs

There have been many upgrades to houses in the past 100 years, but the bathroom is one of the last to be updated. Today's houses have numerous full bathrooms, and they each seem to have the same basic items: a sink (maybe two), toilet, shower, and a bathtub. I question why we still have bathtubs, especially why we have so many in one house. I swear their main use to bathe pets. It seems this space could be better utilized - maybe for a steam cabinet, sauna, or even a whirlpool. I swear the tub in my master bathroom has never actually been used. Until someone notices, it is usually the place the dust bunnies like to hang out. While some tubs have the shower in them, it's the showers which are actually used and not the tub. I would like to know how many people reading this actually use any or all the tubs as tubs in their house (excluding washing pets)? Would you find it more useful to have a steam cabinet, sauna, or whirlpool more often?

1

Randy Rought
REALTOR®

303-503-6210 / RoughtR2@aol.com

Air Force Retiree still Serving my Community