MISSIONARY SPOTLIGHT

(Each month we will highlight a missionary our church supports.)

This month's spotlight is John and Gay Davis who are missionaries to the Native Americans.

John and Gay Davis currently teach at Lumbee River Christian College in Robeson county North Carolina. The largest Native American tribe in this area is the Lumbee, but there are other groups in the area as well. The work that John and Gay do at Lumbee River Christian College is directly focused on the need for solid training in Bible, theology, and pastoral practices. John is the Vice President for Student Life, while Gay is the Director of Assessment and oversees the cafeteria.

Gay felt God's call for ministry to Native American's at 8 years old watching a missionary slide show of Otavalin Indians. John received a burden for this work in 1995 after pastoring for 10 years in Memphis, MO. Their ministry to Native Americans began in 1998 at Black Hills Indian Bible College in South Dakota and in 2013, they relocated to where they are now. If you are interested in giving toward the Davis' ministry or to missions in general, fill out the missions pledge card and put it in the offering plate.

FOR I KNOW THE PLANS THAT I HAVE FOR YOU, SAYS THE LORD, PLANS FOR PEACE AND NOT FOR EVIL, TO GIVE YOU A FUTURE AND A HOPE.
