

The Forgotten American

I was recently asked at an event in Eau Claire why I was running for the United States Senate. The woman later commented to me that she was glad that I stuck around and visited with everyone, nearly until the place closed down! My answer struck me to my core as I thought about the number of people I've met with, the stories I've both heard and shared, and the faces that I take with me as I travel Wisconsin.

I'm running for the Senate because this seat has been taken by special interests, sponsored by rich and powerful lobbyists, and held hostage by a regime bent on destroying the foundation of the greatest nation in the history of the world. This seat belongs to us, the people of Wisconsin, not Tammy Baldwin or her leftist cabal. I am running to be our next Senator to represent those who have been abandoned and forgotten by the ruling elite that run in Democrat circles.

Our campaign continues to be fueled by the hardworking moms and dads who keep this nation moving forward, often faced with heart-wrenching situations, hard decisions, and sadly, a government that just doesn't seem to work for us anymore. I speak and visit in VFW halls, church basements, and living rooms around Wisconsin, and the common theme is that people feel forgotten.

The strength of America is rooted in hard-working people who want to take care of family, practice our faith without discrimination, and strive to make things better for our kids and grandkids. And this journey has always encountered challenges and setbacks. But we Americans keep getting back up after being knocked down, and we soldier on.

Recently, however, the journey towards a better tomorrow has been under an attack by people who want to destroy our families, activists that want to undermine the institutions that have defined us as a people, and slowly dismantle the foundations of American life, infecting our school system, sowing division and pitting Americans against one another for political gain.

I'm running for the Senate because we can do better, we must do better. I don't believe in flyover country. You in Wisconsin are part of what makes us stronger, whether you run a multi-million dollar company, or whether you teach our kids. You are vital to the strength of our communities if you are a nurse or welder, a waitress or an attorney. You are not forgotten, and as long as we gear up and commit to one another to defend our nation, as long as we can look one another in the eye and know that which is right will always be our North star, you will always have a place at the discussion table. Please join me as we take this Senate seat and our nation from the grasps of political ideology and remember that we are one nation under God, indivisible, no matter what the left would like you to believe.

Stacey Klein
US Senate Candidate