We know that covid19 has disrupted all of our lives and we know that some of you are tired of it but there are precautions that we must follow at the VFW in the canteen, kitchen, and in all meetings.

These predictions are as followed: maintain 6 foot distancing, wearing of masks unless you are seated and eating or drinking, no standing at the bar, sanitizing all areas. We are doing our part with these items but are coming up short.

We need your help as members, to keep our Post, bartenders, members, and guest safe. Please, adhere to the rules and help our bartenders enforce it. Please, keep in mind that there are not many seats at the bar but we can accommodate people at our tables, in the hall, and outside. if you are coming in with two or more people take advantage of these other areas.

Come on in the canteen during normal business hours and visit with comrades/members. You are more then welcome to take your drinks in the hall and/or outside to our picnic tables. No standing at the bar. Don't forget social distancing, masks must be worn when you are walking around, and if you are sick-please stay at home.

Thank You

Building a better boot camp: How to make Marines during a pandemic, and beyond

Picture Marine Corps boot camp. You probably see a huge drill instructor screaming directly into the face of a determined young recruit.

Well, all that's on hold for now.

Roughly 2,000 new recruits have passed through Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island, South Carolina, since the beginning of the coronavirus pandemic, and their experiences have looked quite different compared to those who came before them.

After an uptick in COVID-19 cases during March first forced social distancing aboard the base, there have been a lot of changes: Training companies have been at anywhere from 50 to 75-percent capacity, with open bay sleeping areas measured to an exact six feet between every bunk; trainees and cadre are keeping their distance both inside facilities as well as outside, and wearing masks wherever they can't stay apart; and a two-week quarantine period prior to the start of practical training has turned into something of an extended study and acclimation session.

"They said they're coming out of their restricted period more confident and more at ease," Defense Secretary Mark Esper told reporters traveling with him to Parris Island on Wednesday. "They had more time to study and focus and are just coming in a little bit smarter."

A PTSD SURVIVORS VIEW OF PTSD AWARENESS MONTH

The month of June was designated as PTSD Awareness Month. Sadly, there was little to no mention of it on social media or network news. This apparent lack of interest in a problem that should be important to every American sent me on a search to see how much status information I could find on the web. First stop, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs website, where I found a document titled “National Strategy for Preventing Veteran Suicide 2018-2028”. [NOTE; DOD/VA/ Congress have been lamenting and responding to brain injuries TBI/PTSD/Concussion, with “Suicide Prevention” studies, strategies, conferences and proclamations for more than a decade. All of these august groups continue to claim that “Preventing Veterans Suicide is our #1 priority”. Yet the rate of suicide has barely budged.]

Strategies described in the VA document only vaguely address the difference between veteran and civilian inclination to suicide. The VA Strategic plan notwithstanding, it is clear that military personnel have additional stresses related to deployment as well as the stress of combat including living in a hostile environment for extended periods. One of the most significant differences is that military personnel in combat situations are exposed to explosions of IED's, road side bombs and other weapons systems. All too often exposure to these blasts results in Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI). TBI has been described as the signature wound of the wars in IRAQ and Afghanistan. Since 2000, 414,000 of our troops have been diagnosed with TBI. A recent Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) study states that 21% of those diagnosed with TBI also suffer from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). Thus: 21% X 414,000 = 86,940 cases of PTSD. This number is likely very conservative. All of these cases are related to injuries to the brain. The introduction to the VA strategic plan states that “Suicide prevention is VA's highest priority”. Further, the executive in charge, Carolyn M. Clancy, M.D. states in her introductory remarks, “we have identified preventing Veteran suicide as our highest clinical priority”. In spite of this top priority status nothing in the “National strategy for Preventing Veteran Suicide 2018-2028” addresses injury to the brain, the signature wound of the war on terror. It isn't even mentioned. How can preventing veterans suicides be the highest priority when the primary cause of the suicides, injury to the brain, is not acknowledged in the National Strategic Plan?

Although not addressed in the strategic plan, TBI & PTSD continue to be treated by the VA and the U.S. Military. The treatment protocols that have been in use for many years have yielded a sustained rate of veteran's committing suicide in the 20+/day range. Approved treatment protocols for treating TBI & PTSD fall into three basic categories (1) Drugs - Most of the anti-depressant drugs that are prescribed include a black box warning. This strongest of FDA warnings tells users that the prescribed drug may induce suicidal ideation or actions.

Debate continues regarding the direct correlation of anti-depressant use and suicide, however there is agreement that potential for negative effects increase during the dosage ramping up period (eight weeks), whenever dosage is changed, or when the drug is discontinued. Abruptly discontinuing anti-depressant drugs can have devastating effects. All changes in dosage must be undertaken with extreme caution. Many problems associated with anti-depressant drugs could be avoided if drugs were not the first treatment prescribed but, instead were the last, and used only after other treatments that include only mild or short duration side effects have been tried and failed.

(Continue on Page 10 See PTSD SURVIVORS)

(Continue PTSD SURVIVORS)

(2) Psychotherapy (talk therapy) includes: psychoanalysis, cognitive behavioral therapy, individual and group therapies, mindfulness and others. – Treatment of mental problems by talking to a psychiatrist, psychologist or other health care provider. This approach has little to no chance of succeeding if the problem is the result of a physical injury to the brain (TBI). In the case of a TBI the first step must be proper diagnosis and medical intervention to heal the wounded brain. (3) Service dogs, support groups and recreational activities. - All of these are intended to provide emotional support through pleasant activities conducted in a calm and caring environment. They all provide much needed relief to those suffering from invisible wounds. It is time to acknowledge that CARING IS NOT ENOUGH. DECISIVE ACTION THAT BEGINS WITH HEALING THE WOUND TO THE BRAIN IS REQUIRED. Over the past 20 years the three basic approaches described in (1), (2) & (3) above have yielded some successes. Yet in spite of best efforts by medical professionals and countless dollars invested, the exorbitant emotional costs of suffering of the wounded and their families continues, and the suicide rate remains in the 20+/day range.

There is a fourth treatment option that includes the emerging and alternative treatments that are listed and described on the STAND for the TROOPS website (www.sfft.org). All of those listed have been extensively reviewed by clinicians and found to have benefits that far exceed their potential for negative side effects. These treatments could be used singly, in combination or in conjunction with the treatments described in (1), (2) & (3) above. Using this logic, treatments could be tailored to meet the needs of each individual wounded warrior. The list includes:

Hyperbaric Oxygen Therapy (HBOT) Further information about HBOT is available at www.treatNOW.org

Cranial Electrical stimulation (CES)

EEG Neurofeedback (High Performance Neurofeedback)

individualized Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation (iTMS)

Low-Level Light Therapy (LLLT)

Transcendental Meditation (TM), Service Dogs and other non-invasive treatments

The reason for including a list of some of the emerging and alternative treatments that are available for treating TBI/PTSD is to demonstrate that all available tools are not being used to best advantage in the fight to end the suicide epidemic among our veterans. For example, a decade of research, experience and clinical medicine using Hyperbaric Oxygenation has resulted in helping to heal over 7,500 brain wounds in service members and civilians, safely, effectively and inexpensively. Proponents of these emerging and alternative treatments assert that they should be used to help in the treatment of those with injured brains and that sufficient evidence and data exists to justify their inclusion in the list of approved treatment protocols. Others argue that there is insufficient data to warrant their inclusion in the treatments being used. While the debate continues, so does the suicide rate of 20+/day.

NEWSLETTER EDITOR: If you have anything for the newsletter, contact Ed Dahling. Make sure Ed has your email address.

QUARTERMASTER: Bill Collins reported koozies were ordered and delivered for the Golf tournament. No specific date on koozies so they can be used at later date. Also received donations of cooling towels.

NEW BUSINESS: Paymaster Ed Dahling read the 2020-2021 budget, starting July 31st. Total budget: $6,295.

Ray Sturm stated that many of the line items listed were not used on a regular basis. Ray suggested changing the Food & Beverage line item from $600 to $1200 as this could be used for meeting nights to promote retention of members. Nila Caulder asked who would be POC for ordering foods. Ray stated this could be worked out amongst the members.

Ed Dahling stated the Department raffle is still ongoing despite the date on the ticket. Send all ticket stubs and checks to Ed Dahling.

GOOD OF THE LEAGUE: Jim Galvin thanked the Detachment for the donation to the Scout troop. Jim stated troop leader Jim Dunn is now out of the Assisted Living home. All of the planned activities have been cancelled, but once things settle down he thinks there will be many Eagle Scout Courts of Honor scheduled.

Ray Sturm reported on the National Convention which was scheduled for Daytona Beach. Since the League cancelled the Convention and not the hotel, the MCL was liable for $250K. After acquiring a lawyer to handle the situation, the hotel stated they couldn't assure all of the activities would be available due to the virus situation. Hotel agreed to cancellation with stipulation of future convention possibly being held in 2023.
