

Ringo Starr and the PLO – the Truth Revealed

Although many people might find this shocking, I have strong reasons to believe that Ringo Starr is in fact Yasser Arafat, the Head of the PLO.

I know it may seem shocking, but let's look at the evidence.

In the early sixties, the Beatles were seen everywhere. But then in 1966, they gave their last live concert and were seen in the public less frequently – certainly Ringo seems to have faded a bit, even though John was still fairly visible. In 1967, the PLO started to be much more visible, and by 1968, Yasser Arafat was constantly in the news...but not Ringo... coincidence?

Both Ringo and Yasser made the cover of Time Magazine, in an illustration, not picture image. PLUS both made the cover as part of a GROUP.

They both make the peace sign with their fingers! look at all that gesticulation!

While Yasser has long loved guns, we only recently have noted Ringo's gun fetish. See above image!

Consider this – despite an extensive search, I can find exactly ZERO PHOTOS OF RINGO AND YASSER TOGETHER! Go ahead, Google it – there are NONE.

In 1970, the PLO got kicked out of Jordan into exile and is basically out of sight for awhile. But in 1971, Ringo resurfaces with a hit song called "It Don't come Easy", clearly a veiled reference to the struggle for Palestinian Statehood.

Lastly, consider all of the above, and then look at the picture images. Their physical similarities, and their peculiar beard style, look remarkably similar, as though they were almost clones of each other. Since cloning was not possible until recently, it would seem to mean that only one conclusion is possible...they must be the same person!

And since Walrus's don't live in Palestine, and neither did Yasser and most Palestinians, we all now know who the Walrus really was - it was Yasser/Ringo!

Teaching Tip - At this point, I hope to God all your students know you are messing with them. If not, as a nation, we really are doomed. I would make some comments to them about the changes to media in the last 20 years, about the movement away from proper investigative reporting to OP ED style "journalism", where a loosely knit series of anecdotes gets pulled together into a conclusion that is really not supportable, but often repeated.

You can have some more fun, and ask your students if they believe Obama was really born in the US, see if some are suspicious. Then you can spring it on them that you know he was in fact not born in the US, but born in HAWAII. See if any of them are aware that Hawaii is part of the US.
