

Trumpers and Republicans

Terry Large, MS

large.terry@gmail.com

Like most Americans we saw Reagan and Trump march to a different drummer. They had their own marching orders that were not of the established Republican doctrine. That was how Reagan brought the Soviet Union to its knees and why we had a warp speed vaccine as well as peace in the Israel and Arab countries. They went in a new direction that led to achievement. Something they were elected to do and something that they wanted to do from day one.

No other Republicans or Democrats would have been able to do the above. Reagan and Trump had the ability to use reality and truth to succeed in their policies. Democrats and many Republicans hated Reagan. The same is true with Trump.

Nelson Rockefeller and William Scranton tried to stop Barry Goldwater from becoming the Republican nominee in 1964. Those that supported the two East Coast Republicans did not turn out and vote for Goldwater in the general election. The engaged supporters of Bush, McCain and Romney were not Trump fans. They are main stream Republicans that support the old Republican doctrine. Then we have people that voted for both Reagan and Trump. Those two President's not only appealed to many conservative Republicans, but also to the blue collar workers of either or no party.

I share this to help explain why the support that Trump is getting is coming from his grass roots, not the establishment Republicans. Romney hates Trump, McCain hated Trump, and we have no Bush saying anything nice towards Trump. Even the establishment judiciary is not a fan of Trump. I believe this is why Trump had so many issues in filling cabinet and White House positions. Many of the initial office holders were establishment Republicans and not willing to see the world with a different prescription. This election comes down to the Republicans, Democrats and Independents who came together and cast at least 74 million votes for Trump. The establishment cannot stand that level of support for another outsider. It is up to us, the Trump grass roots movement, to help carry him across the finish line next month. The Republican establishment will never have his back.