"61 Years of Producing Quality Charolais Genetics"

Cattlemen;

Welcome to our 35th Schmidt Charolais Bull Sale and 61 years of breeding Charolais genetics. Thank you for showing interest in our program and to the many buyers that have bought bulls for several years. Through the years we have always worked to produce affordable, high quality bulls that will sire excellent feeder cattle with eye appeal, weight and that sell well. These bulls are bred to add pounds and eye appeal to any calf crop.

The bulls have done well this year and look good not withstanding very difficult conditions.

All information and performance data is in the catalog or will be available on the web site at www.schmidtcharolais.com. Ultrasound and fertility information will be posted as it becomes available.

Thank you again for your interest. As always, if you want to go through the bulls prior to the sale give me a call. They are easily accessible.

Randy
308/360-1197

We produce bulls
that sire the kind we like to buy and feed!

Feedlot Research leads scientists to seek Charolais-influenced cattle

While black-hided cattle have long been seen as desirable in feedyards and packing plants across the country, research from South Dakota State University (SDSU) in Brookings, SD, gives colored cattle—specifically, Charolais-sired cattle—exciting new legs to stand on.

There is no real dispute over the value of heterosis or “hybrid vigor,” which occurs when two breeds are crossed. Usually, the best traits from each animal are exhibited in the offspring resulting in an animal that is superior to either parent.

Cattlemen know that although Angus beef, for example, may have more marbling than Continental breeds, Angus cattle are generally lighter muscled and cutability often suffers when they are fed to greater slaughter weights. Crossing Angus cattle with larger-framed Continental breeds like Charolais often results in high-performing cattle without sacrificing quality carcasses.

Enter SDSU’s research team.

The university boasts two locations in eastern South Dakota designed to perform research using real-world feedlot environments. Graduate students and animal science PhDs create and execute experiments at the SDSU Ruminant Nutrition Center located near Brookings, SD, and the Southeast Research Farm located near Beresford, SD.

A rolling population of cattle is required for accurate testing. Recent research projects include testing feed ingredient inclusion accuracy, trace mineral delivery methods and the effects of different cattle receiving protocols.

Dr. Zach Smith and Dr. Warren Rusche oversee the operations of both facilities and are largely responsible for ensuring accuracy of many research components as well as supporting graduate students.

“The goal is to make sure the grad students graduate with their master’s. These research projects are a huge component of that,” said Rusche.

In the spring of 2019, SDSU’s cattle buyer was given a budget and sent to the Ft. Pierre Livestock Auction in central South Dakota to purchase cattle for the Brookings site. There, he found an impressive set of Charolais-influenced cattle. Uniformity in size, age and finish is important in a research setting, and the Charolais calves met each of those requirements.

Additionally, the cattle used in SDSU studies need to be adaptable to the harsh climate of eastern South Dakota where temperatures vary from -20 F to over 100 F, including wind, all forms of precipitation and humidity. Since the Charolais-influenced cattle were born and raised in South Dakota, there was little concern they would be able to adapt.

After the first experience feeding the Charolais-influenced calves, the SDSU research team decided to purchase calves from this ranch in subsequent years. A variety of research projects were conducted, none of which focused on cattle breed. After the projects were concluded, the cattle were harvested. According to Rusche, here is when highlights specifically tied to breed composition emerged.

The steer calves purchased in the fall of 2021 were finished to 1,475 pounds and harvested in July. Even though they were heavy, and July was particularly hot, the Charolais-influenced cattle’s feed intake was not affected.

The cattle graded exceptionally well with over 50% grading upper 2/3 Choice or Prime and only 17% Yield Grade 4 or 5. Only 12% of the cattle did not grade Choice or better.

Interestingly, the heifers from this ranch graded even better than the steers with nearly 80% grading upper 2/3 Choice or Prime with only 15% Yield Grade 4 or 5. Breaking this down according to Rusche, even though the cattle appeared to be over-finished, they did an exceptional job of depositing fat in the muscle rather than backfat or KPH (kidneys, pelvis and heart) fat.

While the Charolais-sired calves were fed in Brookings, black-hided calves meeting the same research criterion were fed simultaneously at the Southeast Research Farm. These cattle were fed through the summer, and their feed intake suffered during heat stress events. Because of the differences in how cattle responded to heat stress, the SDSU researchers are considering a limitation on the number of black-hided cattle on feed during the summer months.

With the current year’s group of Charolais-influenced calves already on feed for research in Brookings, work is underway to ensure the next round of cattle brought into Brookings will be sourced from the same rancher. The South Dakota rancher’s herd-handling techniques coupled with the herd’s uniformity in size, age and genetics, plus overall herd health at receiving, make these Charolais-influence cattle ideal for research.

Having quality, healthy, productive stock from day one is key. The cattle can perform immediately while letting graduate students, staff and faculty gauge the efficacy of protocols, feed ingredients and environment without having to hypothesize about why certain animals in groups do not perform or deal with health issues.

“SDSU’s Ruminant Nutrition Unit and its faculty are evaluated on publishing, grad students completing degrees and mentoring. The cattle are the tool. The research SDSU does answers questions for cattle feeders in the upper Midwest. How can we use feedstuffs grown here combined with genetics available here? The ultimate goal is to turn the cattle into something that provides a high degree of eating satisfaction to consumers,” Rusche said.

Rusche considers himself a “breed agnostic,” stating there are “good ones of every color.” Yet, the veteran cattle producer turned researcher finds the possibilities triggered by early research exciting.

“I think we’ve used color as proxy for quality and value,” he says. “But, we’ve had a chance to feed enough of these (Charolais-influenced cattle) that I’d put them up against an awful lot of cattle in an awful lot of places.”

Rusche continues, “As our knowledge advances, we can evaluate cattle based on their value while being color blind. Biological basis of heterosis has not changed. There are real advantages to using breeds complementary. These (Charolais-sired) cattle have been grading particularly well. The producer has made decisions to use Angus on the female side to make these good calves. It’s hard to find cattle that excel in everything from feed conversion plus quality grade and cutability, but I think we’re seeing that.”

To say SDSU has been pleased with the way their Charolais-influenced cattle have performed is an understatement.

“Combining Charolais and Angus genetics to keep quality without having excess fat while maintaining feed efficiency has proven very effective. Small differences in feed conversion adds up in a hurry with the rising cost of feed,” Rusche said.

Identifying cattle sources with exceptional growth, efficiency and carcass potential is a key component to the future of SDSU’s feedlot research program. Charolais-influenced cattle have proven to meet those criteria well. Given all that’s already been learned, Charolais genetics will likely continue to be an important tool in the university team’s mission to find answers to today’s cattle feeding challenges while also training the next generation of animal scientists. — Hilary Rossow and Amy Blum for American-International Charolais Association
