A woman sits in a friend's kitchen. The woman is upset and tells her friend the story of what's happened. She's afraid she's been banned from the Mennonite second-hand clothing store where she buys much of her wardrobe, especially her beloved "June Cleaver" dresses. After inadvertently breaking store rules on several occasions and incurring the disapproval of the retirees who volunteer there, she commits a further crime by disemboweling a down coat while trying to make it fit.
