A childhood dream can create a significant impact in the big picture. That was the case for Tom Slawson, leading him into a career that has made up the bulk of his adult life. We are thrilled to be spotlighting Los Angeles Police Officer, Tom Slawson who selflessly served his community for 51 years before retiring with his wife, Charlene, in Wells, Maine.

Tom was born, raised, and married in Los Angeles, California. Upon graduating high school, he began his career as a police officer; a dream he had held since childhood. As Tom tells it, to this day, he vividly remembers being barely five years old asking Santa Claus for, "a cop hat, a cop badge, a cop stick and a cop mustache."

During his 51-year career he expressed how important and how impactful the relationships he made along the way were. "I made many friends, several of whom were from my early days in the academy. We still keep in contact on a regular basis to this day." Those who work in law enforcement often experience long shifts, difficult sleep schedules, dangerous scenarios, and so much more. This type of work requires resilience, commitment, and trust in your fellow officers.

Tom served in Los Angeles and York County from 1966 to 2017. After his time in Los Angeles, he and Charlene relocated to New England where his wife's family had resided since the early 1800's.

Tom was asked if he had any additional advice or insight he would like to share with someone looking to start a career in law enforcement. His response was as follows: "Serving in law enforcement is an honorable profession. Although it can be very dangerous, hard, and exhausting at times, it is also immensely rewarding." He went on to express how the experiences and relationships he had were one in a million.

Today, Tom continues to support his community, and those who serve the community. He loves living in southern Maine, and all that it has to offer. We thank Tom and his family for their service, and sharing their experience with us!
