

Jenny Haver
MMS Aviation
Apprentice Aircraft Mechanic

I was raised in a Christian family in NE Ohio, and became a believer at a young age. I was homeschooled from kindergarten through graduating high school before attending the University of Akron to study mechanical engineering. After graduating in 2011, I worked as an engineer for three years at a small consulting company in the Akron, Ohio area.

It was sometime in high school that I began feeling a pull to be involved in missionary work, but wasn't sure how God would use me. During college my love for missions grew, but with that came a frustrating and confusing sense of discouragement that I wasn't the "right type" of person. Through a summer missions trip, Bible study, and the influence of godly people in my life, God began showing me that if he calls a person, he can and will use them. He began showing me how he uses different types of people in different ways: different "parts of the body". I started seriously looking into how I could be involved in missions and praying for God to lead me. First I looked into how engineers are used, since that was my field, and then looked into being a pilot. But I really wasn't sure about either of those options. I came across MMS Aviation's website while researching missionary pilots, and after learning from them about the need in missions for airplane mechanics, it quickly clicked with me that this was what God was leading me to do!

I was accepted by MMS Aviation in July of 2013, and, after raising support, began serving as an apprentice airplane mechanic in December of 2014. After completing 30 months of training, my intention is to serve in missionary aviation long-term, wherever God leads me next!

MMS Aviation