

Biography: Michael Elm - SDCC

Michael Elm is a senior at San Diego Christian College majoring in Aviation Technology with an emphasis in military or corporate flying career. Michael started flying at the age of 14 and has pursued his passion for 8 years. Michael believes that God speaks to his life through the many fellowship opportunities he is presented with through the SDCC aviation program. Michael's hobby is Falconing - and he is one of only 52 bird-abatement Falconers in the world. He has been working at Travis Air Force base during his summers breaks which he hope will lead to a career as a pilot in the US military. Michael has also had the privilege of working for NASA as a Research Pseudo-Pilot testing the new NextGen Air Traffic Control System.

His father was a United States Marine serving in San Diego. Michael excelled in Air Force JROTC in high school and served as second in Command of his unit.

Michael was elected captain of SDCC's competition Flight Team for 2013-2014. He places a high value on community service and will lead his Flight Team in voluntary service with at-risk youth in aviation-related activities. He is a motivated follower of Christ, and is a shining light to all he encounters.
