

Jasson Farmer, UIM

Jasson Farmer works as a missionary field pilot with United Indian Mission Aviation. He is married to Kimberly, and together they have four kids, Kaleb, Noah, Micah and Katie.

Jasson serves the Lord as a mission aviator in Tepic, Mexico. Jasson and Kim are natives of Colorado. They began their missionary career in 2005, when they went to Papua New Guinea with New Tribes Mission. It was while in Papua New Guinea that the Lord had rekindled a fire that Jasson had for aviation. Seeing first hand how mission's aviation can impact the reach of the Gospel, is what inspired Jasson to go into missions aviation.

After spending a year on the field of PNG, Jasson and Kim returned home to begin training as a missionary pilot. Jasson has received his commercial aviation single and multi-engine licenses, flight instructor's certification, as well as, his airframe and power-plant (aircraft mechanic) certification.

In 2010 Jasson and Kim joined UIM Aviation, and moved to the field of Mexico in 2012. Jasson, along with two other missionary families, opened up a new airbase in Central Mexico. His duties include Area Manager and Field Pilot in Tepic, Mexico. The majority of the flying is for indigenous pastors and Bible translators. They feel extremely blessed to be involved in missions and see first-hand the amazing work of the Lord.
