ECO-FRIENDLY SUSTAINABLE DESIGNS FROM BERTON

The desire to design, which has been in humans since ancient times and naturally adopted as a genetic code, brings with it new spaces and objects according to new needs and aesthetic perceptions

In this age we live in; New phenomena such as climate change, rapid urbanization, structuring, and the gradual alienation of nature from our environment have begun to be discussed.

The design is; In various branches such as architecture, interior architecture, industrial product design, it resorts to new ways to find solutions to such problems. In this sense, many certificate programs are on the agenda in order to emphasize environmental awareness.

The ecological and sustainable design approach, which is the main purpose of many different certificate programs, aims to realize our goals of leaving a greener world for the future. Ecological design briefly defines the most efficient use of natural resources and is fed from renewable resources from the material used to the language of the design.

In this way, it creates a positive cycle from the air cycle to the water cycle, from protecting the nature of animal and plant communities to human health

Sustainable design actually comes into play at this point and defines works that have the ability to sustain themselves. Recyclable materials are very important for sustainable designs in this sense. However, sustainability goes one step further and refers to long-term use, namely the durability of a product design or a space design.

Iroko tree that Berton had used is an important material for ecological and sustainable design. Trees hold the carbon in the air and give oxygen to the environment, thus ensuring a healthier life for the world's creatures. In addition to providing products, the woods obtained from industrial forests; It also provides ecological benefits. Wood is also a recyclable, biodegradable and reusable material. For this reason, wooden designs

RAW MATERIALS

The iroko tree is a perennial tree species originating from Africa and grows in the African rain coats and Amazons. Iroko is harder and weaker comparing to teak tree, easy handling, protecting its shape, Being resistant to water and pressure allows the iroko tree to be used in garden furniture.

The timber obtained from the iroko tree is a very hard, high density and durable material. In addition, the veins of the iroko tree, which remain open and prominent after turning brown over time, make it very impressive and stylish.

For this reason, it is preferred in the production of garden furniture with specially designed decoration and wooden products. The fact that it is used for many years and is resistant to insects also makes iroko wood popular in the furniture field. The fact that it dries easily and does not deform after processing allows you to make anything desired in the decoration area from iroko wood.

As well as being stylish and modern, outdoor furniture designs are robust, durable and even being lightweight is very important. Outdoor designs that come into contact with water and air Longer life due to aluminum construction to prevent structural deformation allows its use.

The best way to make your outdoor area more pleasant in summer is to buy useful and convenient furniture. Choosing suitable furniture to your garden such as sofa set, table, chair, swing and accessories that will complement their style will allow you to create a completely different atmosphere in your garden. It will not be enough to bring these designs together to get your garden that you have designed with inspiration or that you have dreamed for a long time, because it's very important for furniture designs to be durable and robust as well as being stylish and modern.

Considering the materials from which outdoor furniture is produced, aluminum is one of the most durable among them.

RESISTANT RAW MATERIALS

ALUMINUM FRAMES

Aluminum material is used especially to make garden furniture durable due to the durability and strength it provides, that's the reason why It's the most preferred after iron, moreover aluminum is extremely durable, resistant to corrosion, low cost and very light physically.

Aluminum garden furniture is preferred due to its light weight, easy movable furnitures are ideal for people who want to close their garden in winter and store their belongings. In addition, people who want to change the garden decoration can easily change the furniture by taking advantage of the lightness of aluminum furniture. In addition, metal or iron furniture will rust and deteriorate over time, and if they come into contact with water, their paint will wear off over time. However, such corrosion issues do not exist in aluminum due to its robust structure.

The appearance of outdoor furniture is as important as its robustness, regular maintenance and cleaning is also essential for the long-term use of this type of outdoor furniture, regarding aluminum garden furniture, this maintenance and cleaning need is minimal.
