At John Price Funeral Home, we place our clients' health and safety above all else. As such, During the Covid-19 pandemic emergency we are doing everything we can to service our communities while also protecting you, the public.

Aside from our normal cleanliness and sanitizing protocols we are now increasingly being more diligent in keeping our location as safe as possible for clients, staff and vendors. Rest assured that we have accelerated the best health and safety standards for the daily needs of our clients. That being said as an essential business that must stay open during this health emergency; we must caution all of our clients and family about the challenges that entail these trying times. As many of you may be aware the federal government has decreased the suggested maximum gathering capacity to ten persons or less. At This time we must not only respect our state and federal government's decision but also show discernment for the sensitive purpose of a funeral, to grieve. While our office stands by the mandates and suggestions of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and Governor Tom Wolf, we must also acknowledge the possibility that a situation could arise in a viewing where a sum greater than ten people could temporarily and contemporaneously enter or exit a room.

We encourage our guests to exercise extreme caution when entering and to allow others to exit before entering a viewing. We encourage our guests to not share tissues or similar items and to also refrain from touching other guests and even the deceased. We also encourage our guests to maintain a safe distance from each other and our staff and also to be aware our location offers two bathrooms for hand washing.

As an essential business you can count on us to stay open during your time of need but unfortunately due to the nature of the pandemic we cannot guarantee your immunity from an airborne virus and can only advise that you follow the practice of social distancing. With that being said we promise to do our part to ensure your safety within our walls and to carry out that promise with professionalism and due care. Please offer your signature below to signify you have read and fully understand the aforementioned health warning.
