About the artist

Born in Arizona, Joe Louis Molina has lived in Colorado for over 30 years. A poverty stricken childhood motivated Joe to move towards an artistic path of self-expression. He is a multi-media artist who creates raku pottery, large scale paintings and photography that tells a visual story. Much of his inspiration is derived from his travels. Each work that he creates is unique and comes from his heart. As a student, he learned to channel his emotions and translate them into personal works of art.

Joe Molina has made himself acutely attuned to the natural world and its processes – both those that create balance and cause destruction. It was initially this awareness that sparked his creative career as he sought a way to respond to the 2009 Tsunami. Though Joe began with collage and pottery, lately he has turned to large-scale acrylic painting to better articulate the full scope of this inspiration. Molina uses the immense picture plane of the canvas to heighten the colors of nature and enhance the tranquility of the sublime.

Molina is an artistic impressionist painter whose work often reflects his love of nature. Not afraid to take risks, Joe has been known to mix wine and paint together to create his artwork, and lately has included gems to create a third dimension. Joe Molina, with Mexican and Native American roots, and married to a Japanese American woman, uses these influences to create his art. His appreciation of diversity and culture, combined with his life experiences, has enabled him to craft a large body of artwork. His painted scenes of Africa, tsunamis of Japan, and aspen trees truly provide an admirer a quick glimpse at his wide artistic views, in addition to his vivid use of color.

Just as quickly as Joe stumbled into pottery, he also found his niche as a painter. In an attempt to practice his painting so that he could paint on his four foot tall vases, Joe began his journey to becoming a well-known artist. He began to paint in the middle of the night and his painting never stopped. The home office turned into a makeshift studio. Then, he began to take over the garage, and soon he had his own studio and warehouse to work out of. Who knows what will transpire in the future for Molina. If you blink, you might miss out!
