

The Two Step: Mastering the Dance of Home and Work

Workshops on lessening stress at work by strengthening life at home

Finding the balance between work and home is often a stressful dance for many workers. One way to support your employees is by offering workshops that focus on family life. When you invest in the well-being of your staff, the rewards are many for you, your employees, and your business.

- Success at work is highly dependent on an individual's well-being. The employee who is content at home is likely to be more productive at work. Happier workers are less likely to experience burnout in the workplace.
- Employers who recognize the importance of stability in their employees' personal life contribute to the well-being of their colleagues by creating a healthier and more productive work environment.

Examples of one-hour "lunch and learn" workshops include:

Self-Awareness: Knowing yourself and what you need is vital to your well-being.

Self-Care: This is central to a happy family life and work life.

Communication: Healthy communication skills are important at home and at work.

Harmony at Home: Being happy with spouse and children affects all aspects of life.

Family Issues: Raising children in a social media world requires discipline and confidence.

Balancing Home and Work: How to attend to all the different areas of your life.
