The R.i.M.E. Project (Reading in Music Education) was the creative vision of John Brewington, who throughout the Covid pandemic grew more and more concerned about what children were missing from school as they isolated in their homes...social interaction, community, and growth in school subjects such as Music and English were among the top issues. He vowed that when the world came back to some normality, Tidewater Winds and public schools would be there to pick up the pieces. So, R.i.M.E. was born. Essentially, the program partners with school districts to develop themed lesson plans for in-school instruction. The lessons guide students through the basics including exposition, setting, story-structure, and character analysis. When the lessons are completed, students attend the Tidewater Winds matinee on the same theme to experience the full staged musical performance of the story. Students enjoy lobby activities with music, puppets and literacy games before and after the concert, then return to classrooms to complete the lesson analysis. The bigger impact for students and teachers is the return to experience the arts in a social setting. What a powerful impact we can make on children's lives by bringing them together to enjoy concert music and theatrics in a relatable context. This first year of RiME presents Pinocchio, but future productions are being developed now. This new signature service from Tidewater Winds has the potential to reach students across the region and offer a powerful and purposeful means of regaining lost learning but also, rebuilding social and mental health in our children. Please help support our RiME Project as we share our love of music and stories with the children of Hampton Roads.
