Please inform GVC of any equipment you sold/donated during the Tax Year so that it no longer appears on your tax return

Business Use of Home

The IRS uses three main tests to determine if a taxpayer is eligible for Home Office deductions:

1. The home office must be used regularly—not necessarily full time but enough time to maintain the business.
2. The home office must be used exclusively for work.
3. A commuter may only claim a home office if the space is used for the convenience of the employer, not the employee

When should I claim a Home Office deduction?

- When your home office is large enough to mitigate the cost of the tax paperwork it takes to claim the space.
- When you telecommute at the convenience of an employer, not yourself
- When your home office is used only for business purposes and it is used often enough to maintain that business
- When you're self-employed and your tax deduction is not more than what you make in your business

Complete Corresponding form on our website www.gvc-financial.com titled "Home Office" and attach with your documentation if you qualify.

Vehicle Information

If you incurred expenses from the use of your vehicle for business purposes, please complete the corresponding form(s) titled "Car Expenses" and/or "Auto Mileage and Expense Log" from our website www.gvc-financial.com and attach them with your tax documentation.

Specialized Professional Deductions

Since each profession is unique, the type of allowable business expenses incurred differs from one another. If your profession is one of the following, please go to our website www.gvc-financial.com and fill out the corresponding form:

- Firefighter
