

Channelling

Channelling needs to be left behind if one aspires to evolve into an Adept. An Adept has built his antahkarana to the capability of transferring his consciousness “beyond the material”( my quotes).

Channelling begs information from the deceptive Astral realm. One is incapable of receiving it from his own soul and serves as a receiver from other-than-self. Is this beneficial to the channeller? It is a phase that will be given up in future lives, hopefully, as one develops intuition.

True intuition emits only from the soul. It is rare. Channels and mediums insist that their received information is not only purely true but inconvertible. In the mid 1800's these processes were fashionable, exciting and spread into the population through media of the times. We are still playing in that sandbox.

As the Aquarian Age devolves the emotions of the Age of Pisces, these aberrant practices will lessen. Spiritual work requires owning ones stuff. We will gradually build a population focussed on self-awareness and esoteric theosophical reality. That is something to look forward to.

Am I against channelling? Not at all, as much beauty and wisdom comes down from the 5th and 6th Astral Levels. How can you tell where it is from? That's the rub... you usually cannot. My advice is to learn meditation and service as a kinder methodology for self-actualization. But that's just me. Use your own discernment, as usual.

© Zoli Althea Browne All rights reserved