COURSE AIMS AND DESCRIPTION

"A concern with mutual construction of spatiality and social relations (and identities) is clearly something which we share."[2]

For much of our history, social science in general (and anthropological archaeologists in particular) has been predominantly concerned with studying how societies change over time. Since the "spatial turn" of the last decades of the 20th-century, however, space has become one of the key foci of scholarship in politics and many corollary social sciences, leading to the production of a diverse, expansive, and ambitious literature on the subject. This seminar charts a course through that literature, focusing in particular on the political production of space – from the scale of bodies, to cities, states, and international systems.

Each week begins with a foundational assumption or concept related to urban space, before exploring how ethnographic and critical geographical research can push the boundaries of that assumption/concept and reveal emergent political possibilities and ways of rethinking the city. The course takes a global approach, interrogating the limitations of Northern, metropolitan theory and the often unacknowledged contributions of studies from and on the global South. In treating 'the urban' in the broadest of terms, the aim of the course is for students to come away with a critical 'toolkit' for understanding intersections of space, power, and difference, and some of the methodological openings and risks of current research in the human sciences.

The course is divided into two core units, focusing on conceptual foundations firstly before venturing into more empirical study of urban space. We will engage with a series of key readings on the ontology and epistemology of space, place and landscape and consider questions that are central to their study – namely, what are these things, and how should we make sense of them? More specifically, how is it that space is produced, experienced, and politicised? After establishing our conceptual foundations and surveying a range of different approaches, we will move on to examine the politics of space at different scales and read works that employ quite different lenses to make sense of spatial dilemmas in their respective areas of study.

GRADE DISTRIBUTION

Participation (20%)

This section is heavily based on participation. The expectation is that the session discussion will be substantively informed by the readings and further readings and run in a seminar format. Of course this design requires consistent and complete attendance. Note that the 20% mark is split 10% per half of the term, with the first 10% announced following the midterm exam.

Assignments (30%):

There will be two papers throughout the seminar, and each one will count 15% toward the final grade. You may choose either to write on a weekly topic or choose a book to review.

Reaction Paper / Review 1	15%	Due after selected session
Reaction Paper / Review 2	15%	Due after selected session

Exams (50%):

There will be two exams, each one counting 25% of the final grade.

Exam 1	25%
Exam 2	25%

There will be no extra credit assignments under any circumstance. The only possible way of improving your final grade beyond the assignments and exams listed is by attending ALL of the lectures; you will receive an additional 1% for not missing any classes.

Finally in terms of assessment, plagiarism is not acceptable in any form, and it will result in immediate failure of the entire course and my submitting the case to both the Department and to the Dean. If you are unsure about citations or what constitutes plagiarism, refer to the AUC policies on academic integrity... and definitely feel free to ask.

And lastly, a note about Office Hours: come to see me. You will do better in this course, and getting into the habit of engaging and talking with your professors on a regular basis will lead you to do better in your academic career. With added individual attention, I can provide you with readings on various topics, clarify things that might not be clear to you, and overall help you to do well.
