

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Saturday, April 30, the 120th day of 2022. There are 245 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history

On April 30, 1945, as Soviet troops approached his Berlin bunker, Adolf Hitler took his own life along with that of his wife of one day, Eva Braun.

In 1789, George Washington took the oath of office in New York as the first president of the United States.

In 1803, the United States purchased the Louisiana Territory from France for 60 million francs, the equivalent of about $15 million.

In 1812, Louisiana became the 18th state of the Union.

In 1900, engineer John Luther "Casey" Jones of the Illinois Central Railroad died in a train wreck near Vaughan, Mississippi, after staying at the controls in a successful effort to save the passengers.

In 1947, President Harry S. Truman signed a resolution officially confirming the name of Hoover Dam, which had also come to be known as "Boulder Dam."

In 1958, Britain's Life Peerages Act 1958 allowed women to become members of the House of Lords.

In 1970, President Richard Nixon announced the U.S. was sending troops into Cambodia, an action that sparked widespread protest.

In 1973, President Richard Nixon announced the resignations of top aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst and White House counsel John Dean, who was actually fired.

In 1975, the Vietnam War ended as the South Vietnamese capital of Saigon fell to Communist forces.

In 1983, blues singer and guitarist Muddy Waters died in Westmont, Illinois, at age 68.

In 1993, top-ranked women's tennis player Monica Seles was stabbed in the back during a match in Hamburg, Germany, by a man who described himself as a fan of second-ranked German player Steffi Graf. (The man, convicted of causing grievous bodily harm, was given a suspended sentence.)

In 2004, Arabs expressed outrage at graphic photographs of naked Iraqi prisoners being humiliated by U.S. military police; President George W. Bush condemned the mistreatment of prisoners, saying "that's not the way we do things in America."

First 'Jeopardy!' Gen Z super champ's streak hits 19 games

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Reigning "Jeopardy!" champion Mattea Roach represents a new generation of the quiz show's all-star players.

As of Friday, the 23-year-old Canadian has won 19 games and amassed $469,184 in prize money, putting her among the top 10 contestants for both consecutive victories and regular-season winnings in "Jeopardy!" history.

Roach, who begins her fifth week of competition Monday, is in the company of veteran standout players including Ken Jennings, who's currently hosting the show, and this season's champs Amy Schneider and Matt Amodio.

"The fact that I'm now one of the best players of all time hasn't fully sunk in yet. It doesn't really feel real," said Roach, the first Gen Zer to be dubbed a "super champion" by the show for achieving a double-digit string of wins. (Generation Z generally refers to those born from 1997 to 2012.)

A tutor for aspiring law school students, and perhaps one herself, she plays with a breezy confidence. Roach is relaxed enough to casually think out loud about her approach, as she did when she hit a crucial Double Jeopardy last Wednesday.

"You know what, if I wager a lot and lose today, like whatever, I had such a good run," Roach mused, then successfully wagered a hefty $8,000 and ended up taking the game from formidable challenger Ben Hsia of Fremont, California.

Theobald

Such is the case with "Eye of the Storm," an intricate piece of woodworking that gives the top-down illusion of a gyrating cyclone.

From the elevation of Pine Bluffs, he can look out over the prairie at the early morning thunderclouds pluming in the distance. He sees the hues of blue and violet as they build over a vast landscape.

The scene reminded him of a hurricane, the eye of the storm that lay idle in the middle. The circular piece is meant to replace that of a hurricane's "pinwheel" effect, as Theobald calls it.

He doesn't know how long it took to complete "Eye of the Storm," he doesn't pay much attention to the time. Judging by the intricacies of his Smithsonian item, it took a good deal of patience to perfect.

"I'm no more patient than anyone else waiting at that traffic light to turn green, but everybody has a patience for their passion," Theobald said. "If your passion is flying kites, you're gonna go out there every day you can to get the satisfaction of flying that kite."

"When I make my work, patience just goes into the passion. It's absorbing. The world does tend to go away when you're making a piece of art."

Beyond that, he isn't sure what inspires him to design a piece of wood a certain way. He always sketches his work, but as he gets absorbed on the process, different ideas arise, and he takes risks.

Sometimes, before the sun rises, he'll wake at 2 a.m. with an idea.

Theobald completed "Eye of the Storm" in 2013. It will be on display in the new "This Present Moment: Crafting a Better World," exhibit at the Smithsonian American Art Museum in Washington D.C. Courtesy

There's no rhyme or reason as to when inspiration strikes. Despite years of labor and practice, turning wood and working in other mediums like glasswork, it's hard for Theobald to take in the fact that his work will remain in one of the most prestigious art museums in the world.

There is one person he wants to thank above everything else, and that's his wife, Wendy. While he's working in the shop, she's keeping things afloat with her day job as a teacher.

"It's nothing new, but behind every successful artist is a successful spouse," Theobald said. "It's not that my wife has boatloads of money - she's a school teacher, so she gets by - but the success is her believing in me that I can do this."

Voter ID

Currently, 35 states have some sort of voter ID law, with varying levels of requirements.

In Wyoming, if ID is not presented at the polls, a voter is given a provisional ballot. To have that ballot be counted, the voter must visit a county clerk no later than the close of business on the following day and present a valid ID.

"They do not have a compelling need to assess this. If they did, where is the evidence?" said Tim Newcomb, the plaintiff in the case and another attorney who has expertise in the Wyoming Constitution.

Pelkey said that the Wyoming Constitution "puts a higher standard for imposing limits on voting rights" than the U.S. Constitution. He was not in the Legislature when the bill passed, but lawmakers attempted to adopt voter ID legislation multiple times before they were successful in 2021.

While past attempts at voter ID were rebuffed, the effort gained new life in the wake of growing concerns about voter fraud by Republicans in the wake of the 2020 presidential election.

Voter fraud is extremely rare in Wyoming, with only a handful of convictions over the past several decades.

During previous legislative sessions, Pelkey said he argued that the bill risked being deemed unconstitutional.

"Election integrity is pivotal, and the voter ID legislation is a basic safeguard to fight voter fraud," Gray said in his statement.

The voter ID law was in effect during some local elections last fall, but its biggest test will come this summer, when Wyoming's primary election is scheduled.

Bartlett provided no other details as to why they both decided to end their time in the school district, but said they received quality letters of recommendation. Crespo confirmed the letters were sent out and said the Bartletts are leaving on good terms.

"We appreciate their years of service for the district," she said. "LCSD1 is incredibly grateful to have had them on staff, and they contributed so much over the years."

Both Dave and Fawn Bartlett started working for LCSD1 in 2002.

The position of superintendent of support operations has since been dissolved, according to Dave Bartlett. He said he oversaw planning, construction, facilities, risk management, safety and security, finance and transportation, as well as purchasing and procurement.

Jennifer Lemman replaced Fawn Bartlett as principal of Meadowlark Elementary.

"We were honored and so privileged to serve the communities of Laramie 1 for past two decades," said Dave Bartlett.
