Show and Tell:

Tom St John made some nice wooden crosses made out of old white barn boards and cover them with poly.

Larry Luebbert brought in a hand carved sign in Basswood with a Keltic knot, stained with an oil finish. He said the Keltic knot took over 6 hours to carve.

Larry Atwater made a wooden cross he made from an idea he saw on Pinterest. It was made of 1/4 inch strips of oak, walnut, and maple. He finished it with poly.

Jim West showed a soft maple bowl, which he turned green back in September and then returned it after it had a chance to dry and covered it in 6 coats of wipe on poly.

Tom Nehl turned some wooden spray cans from mulberry and honey locust and covered them with wipe poly. These were pretty impressive, one of them even rattles like a real can of spray paint.

Don Coleman brought in his dovetail jig and a box he made.
