Effective stockmanship adds to the bottom line ... and it's the right thing to do

Written By Piper Whelan

For Curt Pate, handling cattle in an effective manner is vital to a stockman's success.

"What we really need to think about are what the effects of our cattle handling are doing to the performance of our cattle," he said during the 2018 Western Canada Feedlot Management School in Regina. Pate, who came into the spotlight after working on the film "The Horse Whisperer," gives colt starting, horsemanship and stockmanship clinics across North America. For many years, he made his living starting colts. "I don't know any other job that requires you to change an animal to perform for you more than a colt starter," he said.

"You don't know where that colt's going to go. He might go to a kid, he might go to the futurity down in Fort Worth. So, you start that animal in a way that he can go wherever you want him to go. That's the way I look at cattle handling. We've got to handle these cattle in a way to get our job done, but they can still perform when we're done."

Broken New Year's Resolutions Are Not Really A Serious Deal

By Frank J. Buchman

"New Year's resolutions are made to be broken."
At least that's the way it seems. Lots of folks figure out things that can be done to improve their selves beginning January 1.

Somebody researched it and claimed over 88 percent of Americans make at least one resolution for the New Year. Most common are lose weight, have more money, quit smoking, see the family, maintain a budget, find improved job, eat correctly, get organized, exercise harder, and be a better person.

Being closer to the Lord savior and especially thankful for all His blessings didn't make the Top Ten. But they're really the most important. Personal resolutions are to pray harder, especially expressing appreciation for all received, and seeking guidance in all to be done. Of course, not eat so much, procrastinate less, contact friends, spend additional time horseback, and write more stories.

Surveys show not even 20 percent are successful in keeping one resolution. New Year's Eve is for celebrating. In olden days, many country folks went to the 11 o'clock movie. At midnight, Auld Lang Syne played and everybody wearing party hats blew whistles and threw confetti. Family kissed and hugged while cowboys hoped for another smooch from their girlfriends. Years later, dances at the Armory became popular. However, it's bedtime for most older ones, who try to stay up later at home, but not 'til midnight.

On New Year's Day, most just relax and recuperate. Television parades used to feature trick roping cowboy Montie Montana and his horse Rex. But they're gone, although horses are still the best part of parades. Traditional New Year's Day dinner calls for ham, black-eyed peas, cabbage, and donuts. That's supposed to bring good luck for 365 days.

It is proper to take the scythe, whip the old year good-bye, and look to the birth of a fresh beginning. Babies are symbols of the New Year, and reminder of the nativity of Jesus Christ, savior. New Year's resolutions have been considered paganism, making taking a walk with God more important.

Rebirth and living hope come in First Peter 1:3: "Praise be to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. In his great mercy, He has given us new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Further proof of no need for New Year's resolutions comes in the promise found in Jeremiah 29:11. "For I know the plans I have for you, says the Lord. They are plans for good and not for disaster, to give you a future and a hope." Likewise, is the pledge in Second Corinthians 5:17: "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation. Old things have passed away; behold all things have become new."

A New Year Calendar

by Delbert Shields

I got it from the feed store. They offer them every year.
Right there on the counter, where I order feed for steers.

I normally pick the funny one. It's full of cowboy humor.

Pictures of broncs and broke down trucks, and cows with big ole tumors.

Come January one I get my pen, I write down all my dates.

Grandkids birthdays, my anniversary, and the taxes on our real estate.

The months go by, and pages turn. The seasons come and go.

I like the ones that are cool and fresh, but I despise the ones with snow.

Yes, them ole calendars are reminders, that time is passing by.

I see the dates of loved ones passed, and get water in my eye.

They show the age of children grown, of grandchildren aging too.

They remind us when that rusty truck was purchased and brand new.

It's pages point one direction, toward the future, not the past.
But that's why it seems so encouraging. If only it didn't go so fast.

But, those old calendars serve as memory books, like treasures of bronze we cast. Reflections of the ages. Our children's firsts and lasts.

Time doesn't stop for any man. You can't turn back it's pages.

But I wouldn't trade one single day, for a millionaire's full wages.

...MAY THE GOOD LORD BLESS YOU IN ALL YOU DO IN 2023. HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Before Your Mare Foals

By: Lucile Vigouroux

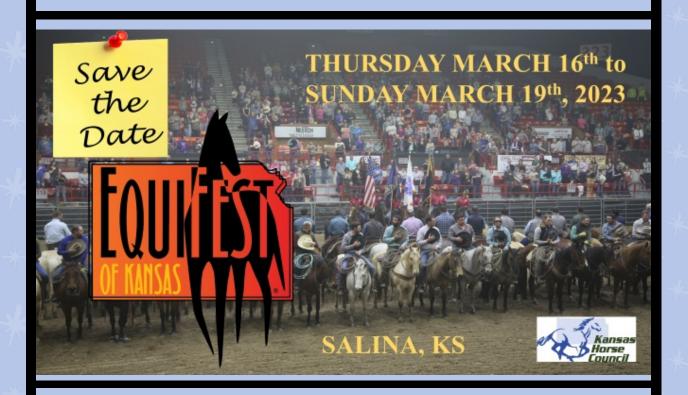

Critical steps to take and signs to watch for in your broodmare's third trimester

Few things bring breeders more joy and satisfaction than welcoming their long-awaited foals. But those in the breeding industry know arriving at this milestone is no small feat. Bringing a horse into the world involves thoughtful matching of sire and dam, months of careful preparation, and a major financial investment. So whether you are a first-time breeder or a seasoned breeding farm manager, you want everything to go well. Here are some tips to help your mare's third trimester run smoothly.

Changes That Occur During the Third Trimester

The average equine gestation lasts about 320 to 360 days, depending on the mare; each has her own gestational length, and the day she foals is often repeatable from year to year. The final 100 days of gestation (third trimester), however, bring their own unique developments, changes, and challenges. At this stage the placenta is fully developed and produces progestins, including the hormone progesterone, that help maintain the pregnancy to term. The fetus, enveloped by the amnion, grows exponentially. In fact, most of the growth occurs during that last trimester—the foal is only about the size of a house cat (8-15 pounds) at six months but weighs upward of 100 pounds at birth.

Chef Alli's Rotisserie Chicken and Potato Casserole

Ingredients

- 6 Tbs. butter
- 8 oz sliced button mushrooms
- 1 small onion, diced (may substitute 1 tsp. granulated onion)
- 1 red bell pepper, seeds and membranes removed, diced
- 1/4 cup all-purpose flour
- 2 cups milk
- Kosher salt and black pepper, to taste
- 2 large potatoes, peeled, diced and cooked until tender
- 2 cups shredded cooked chicken
- 1 cup shredded cheddar cheese

Instructions

- Preheat the oven to 350°F
- In a large skillet over medium heated melt the butter. When the butter is gently sizzling, add the mushrooms, onions, and bell peppers; cook for a few minutes until the veggies are softened, 8-10 minutes.
- Sprinkle the flour over the vegetables in the skillet; cook for 1 minute, stirring often.
- Remove the skillet from the heat and gradually stir in the milk. When the milk has incorporated into the flour a bit, return the skillet to

- the burner.
- Cook the sauce for 2-3 minutes, stirring, until nicely thickened; season to taste with salt and pepper.
- Into a greased 11×8 baking dish, add the shredded chicken and potatoes; pour the sauce and mushroom mixture over the top, then sprinkle with cheese.
- Bake on the center oven rack for 30-35 minutes or until hot and bubbly throughout and 160 degrees F. at the center.
- Let the casserole rest for 5 minutes before serving.

"Bombproof"

Western Horseman Written by Kelly Nuebert

Is it counter-intuitive for me to boldly state that a horse dubbed "bombproof" scares me a little?

See, hearing that term always brings a hint of skepticism to my mind. I know horses exist who can walk through a live minefield and have no reaction, but usually they aren't something most folks would be particularly excited to ride, and people for whom this is a pre-requisite might be a tough fit for most of the horses in the world (and the situations they may face).

Now, I'm not trying to kill anyone's sale. I do understand it's a blanket term and should be taken as meaning that a horse is VERY gentle. I get it, but I hear so many people these days state they need a horse that's basically bombproof. It's a tough fit, one that may even come with a little backlash in the future, should said horse ever spook. I'm comfortable with stating when something is safe to ride, but bombproof? Who wants to run into someone years later, with a busted lip and gimp in their step from a fall-off, shaking their fingers at you, saying "You sold him to me as bombproof!"

To be honest, I don't think that shopping for a bombproof horse is a very easy task, or a very realistic one. As sellers, we understand the term is sacred and should not be diluted. It's reserved for the 2% of horses that really have been through the ringer, seen it all, done it all and boldly march into the circus ring without flicking an ear. Most of us love selling horses that are safe, sound and sane, but when I get buyers who say "bombproof," I usually tell them I don't think I have what they are looking for. Even my most gentle horses and ponies might react to something I cannot anticipate. In fact, my personal feeling is it's preferable to have something with a little self-preservation, most days. I once had a pony that was gentler than a drugged tortoise, but when Luke would fire up his welder, he would startle. I've seen old, worldly geldings tied to trailers in my driveway try to rip the ring off the side of their Featherlites when they see my old pet pig stroll by. Even if they leave my place with my brand, as gentle as a person could want them to be, who can guarantee it will carry throughout every experience of their lifetime? I buy horses, too, and I would never have the expectation of "bombproof" from a seller. The biggest thing about a potentially gentle mount is their disposition, temperament and broke-ness. Sure, a horse is gentle and seasoned, but if we encounter something unexpected or startling on the trail, does he have the right buttons and pieces to make sure my kid, mother-in-law, etc. can still stay safe?

Please know this is not an absolute truth. Some horses really do fit the bill. Good people sell bombproof horses and they are, indeed, the safest thing on four legs. There are plenty out there and I applaud the folks who make them and the ones who seek them out. Most people who use the term carelessly to describe something that may spook sometimes are probably not trying to be malicious or deceptive – that's just been their experience with the mare or gelding. I'm just calling to attention the fact that the word "bombproof" is something to really think about before putting it in a description, whether we are buying or selling.

Now, tell me about something that doesn't whirl at an emu, snort at a llama, or set back at a pig passing by, and you've got yourself a sale, my friend.
