

Shellfish die en masse following Canada heatwave

By Peter Uduehi

Scientists are saying that the mass die-out of up to 1 billion mollusks in British Columbia following record-breaking temperatures is a preview of future extinction events caused by climate change. The region's aquaculture industry is facing an existential threat.

Heatwave in pictures

