

Solar Geoengineering in the UK: Is hell freezing over?

Written by Simon Lee, Science Officer

It's March 2023 and Britain is freezing cold, and the snow is falling...which is a bit unusual. The uninformed chattering classes, who regard themselves as informed because they rely on the likes of the BBC and The Guardian to educate them, are of course blaming this unseasonal weather on "climate change" without a shred of evidence as usual.

Mention geoengineering or weather modification to these same people and you will be immediately dismissed as a "conspiracy theorist". This is in spite of a well-documented and long history of weather modification that is, for now at least, readily available to anybody armed only with curiosity, a functioning brain, and an internet connection.

The uninformed chattering classes may not be aware that researchers in the UK have already launched high-altitude weather balloons that release sulphur dioxide into the stratosphere, in a reckless and dangerous attempt at solar geoengineering.

The aim is to reflect more sunlight back into space to combat "global warming" a fraudulent pseudoscientific non-existent problem pushed by climate alarmists and the ignorant chattering classes.

Solar geoengineering is, understandably, highly controversial because it interferes with the natural order, makes weather less predictable, and threatens food supplies by causing drought. Not to mention that it is all based on a false premise offering a "solution" to a "problem" that doesn't exist.

This "low-cost, controllable, recoverable balloon system" is ominously called SATAN (Stratospheric Aerosol Transport and Nucleation).

Andrew Lockley is the megalomaniac "independent researcher", previously affiliated with University College London, leading the team who believe they are entitled to play God (Or more likely the other guy) without your permission or knowledge.

His paper on the SATAN experiments has been submitted but has not yet been published. When he discovered his paper had been "leaked" Lockley wrote an email to MIT Technology Review:

"Leakers be damned! I've tried to follow the straight and narrow path and wait for the judgment day of peer review, but it appears a colleague has been led astray by diabolical temptation. There's a special place in hell for those who leak their colleagues' work, tormented by ever-burning sulphur."

Is that an attempt at humour or serious taunting? Hard to tell.

It would seem that the scientific value, the potential risks, or appropriateness of these efforts are not up for debate as these megalomaniac sociopaths take the moral high ground based on fake "climate change" pseudoscience.

David Keith, a Harvard scientist rightly pointed out that:

"You don't call something SATAN if you're playing it straight."

Other unhinged climate change lunatics at the UN Environment Programme ("UNEP") want to position giant mirrors to reflect sunlight back into space. In addition, former US presidential hopeful Andrew Yang published a plan to geoengineer the planet in 2019. His proposal to place giant foldable space mirrors in orbit would have cost $4.86 trillion and taken about twenty years to implement.

UNEP also suggests injecting reflective nanoparticles into the stratosphere and brightening low clouds over the ocean by seeding ocean clouds with salt particles as a means to cool OUR planet by restricting sunlight and darkening OUR skies ostensibly to solve a problem that doesn't exist.

Sulphur dioxide is a pollutant gas contributing to the phenomenon of acid rain and it causes significant health problems. Billions were spent on sulphur-capture technology to eliminate sulphur dioxide emissions from burning coal and oil.

Now we are told that we need to spend many more billions releasing this toxic gas into the atmosphere in order to save the planet. Those that got rich from eliminating sulphur dioxide emissions from coal-burning plants now plan on getting even richer from sulphur dioxide atmospheric injections.

Historically when volcanic eruptions of ash and sulphur have dimmed the sun for years causing global cooling this has led to famine and death on a large scale.

These sun-dimming projects may poison the atmosphere, cause acid rain, and lead to the collapse of agriculture in several regions of the world. Blocking sunlight will reduce photosynthesis by plants leading to crop failures which will have a knock on effect for the entire food chain including of course humanity.

Needless to say, whenever there is an opportunity to destroy, control, and profiteer "philanthropist" Bill Gates wants a piece of the action, so he is funding Harvard University's Solar Geoengineering Research Program, SCoPEX, to study "effective ways to block sunlight from reaching Earth's surface".

These schemes are framed as “experiments” for now, but the UNEP report threatens that should the “global stakeholders” decide to proceed, the skies could be darkened within only a few years. These corporate scientists and their sociopathic megalomaniac funders need to be stopped at all costs.

Wrap up warm if you are going outside its big coat weather and its March...hmmm. I wonder if the "global stakeholders" have already made their decision but forgot to tell us about it.
