Choosing a Transportation Factoring Provider

While any of the factoring companies we suggested could work for your trucking business, there are obviously other considerations you need to make before choosing. The questions below can help you make the right choice as you go through the interview process.

- How long, on average, have most clients been with them?
- What are some reasons clients have switched to their company?
- What are some reasons clients have left their company?
- What steps are they taking to improve their service?

Freight Factoring Contract Terms

Before signing, be sure to read the agreement and understand it as well as you can. Every factoring company we spoke with recommended having a lawyer review their contract before signing.

- What are the fees associated with factoring?
- Are all the fees clearly listed in the contract?

- Is there a minimum amount of revenue I must invoice monthly to hold an account?
- Does the company require a personal guarantee?
- Is there an onboarding process?
- For contract disputes, does the company allow mediation?
- If you want to discontinue factoring, what is the process?

Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) Filing

A UCC filing by a factoring provider tells other banks they have a priority lien against your assets. An outstanding UCC filing can prevent you from switching invoice factoring companies, too.

- What are the conditions of the UCC filing?
- When will they file the UCC?
- Is the UCC ever filed immediately after application, before I submit my first invoice?
- Do they file a UCC only on the factored receivables, or will they file a blanket UCC on all assets?
- What's the process for removing a UCC filing?

Customer Service

Good customer service can be priceless when partnering with an invoice factoring company. Though credit checks are increasingly automated, you will still have a relationship with your account manager. Make sure they are helpful — and knowledgeable about your business.

- If they offer the lowest rates, what have they sacrificed?
- Will you be able to get a hold of someone when you need help?
- If you're having issues with the platform or broker, who can you speak with?
- Can you visit a physical location if needed?
- Will you have your own account manager who responds to emails and phone calls?
- Does the account manager understand the trucking business?

Final Thoughts on Trucking Factoring Companies

We encourage you to do your research and hope that the information we've provided gets you started on the path to business growth. Freight factoring is a great way to manage cash flow from outstanding invoices. It's also a method to reduce back office responsibilities and forego the 30 day or longer process for getting paid.

Having a freight factoring company on your side offers your company additional resources. The benefits should pay for themselves over time, whether that's the cash advance, business advice, risk mitigation, or trusted relationships.
