

CHANGE

By C.E. Warner 12-22-21

Life changes as certain as the sunrise.

He who understands and adapts survives.

The inflexible and rigid man dies.

Comfort comes remembering past archives.

Opportunity hides behind dark doors that by choice the timid dares not open.

Many rewards lay unseen in closed drawers,

to be opened only after broken.

The curious and bold aren't without fear.

New and uncertain always comes with risk.

Failures fatal if allowed interfere,

only moving forward does path exist.

In truth, static fear is a walking death,

silently waiting for your final breath.