Monument Valley ESTABLISHED IN 1958

FUN FACTS TO KNOW & TELL

The Navajo Nation's Monument Valley Park is a 5 square mile region of the Colorado Plateau. Engrossed in the southeast end of Utah and the northeast end of Arizona, striated iron oxide red sandstone buttes rise 1000' feet above the valley floor. Stagecoaches found here were made famous by John Ford's 1930's western films starring John Wayne as a cowboy in the old American West. This park offers extraordinary guided tours of a spectacular storied land. Geographically speaking, in the last 50 million years, the mesas and buttes were cut out of a plateau by ancient meandering rivers and the winds of time. Soft sedimentation was peeled away from an early Rock Mountain sediment-filled depression leaving these unsurpassed monuments for all to enjoy.

NATIVE AMERICANS

This park lies within the Navajo Territory where the Navajo's Ice-Age Paleo-Indian ancestors inhabited this land 14000 years ago. Navajos believe they came to their land by emerging through the four levels of worlds and currently reside in the fourth level, the "Glittering World". This people has achieved something quite unique, blending the traditions of an indigenous people with modern ways of life.
