.07 BRANDS TO CONSIDER

.01

COLORS & PATTERNS

Traditionally, we've seen home design trends shift based on the economy.

When the outlook is gloomy, homeowners lean toward a conservative approach, using the staying power of gray and brown tones. But when things are looking optimistic, there's a tendency to use brighter colors and patterns in ways that can be changed with minimal impact. Of course, like the colors themselves, pessimism and optimism can exist in varying shades of expression, especially in periods of uncertainty.

In the new year, there will be an emphasis on colors taken from nature for freshness, such as earth tones and warm neutrals that project a sense of calm. Plus, these colors will be complemented by some livelier accent hues that can be used make a dramatic style statement. Taking into consideration the high level of uncertainty, homeowners will seek base colors that can work with a variety of other color and pattern options to help achieve the ideal balance of mood and style to suit their needs.

PRACTICALITY & DURABILITY

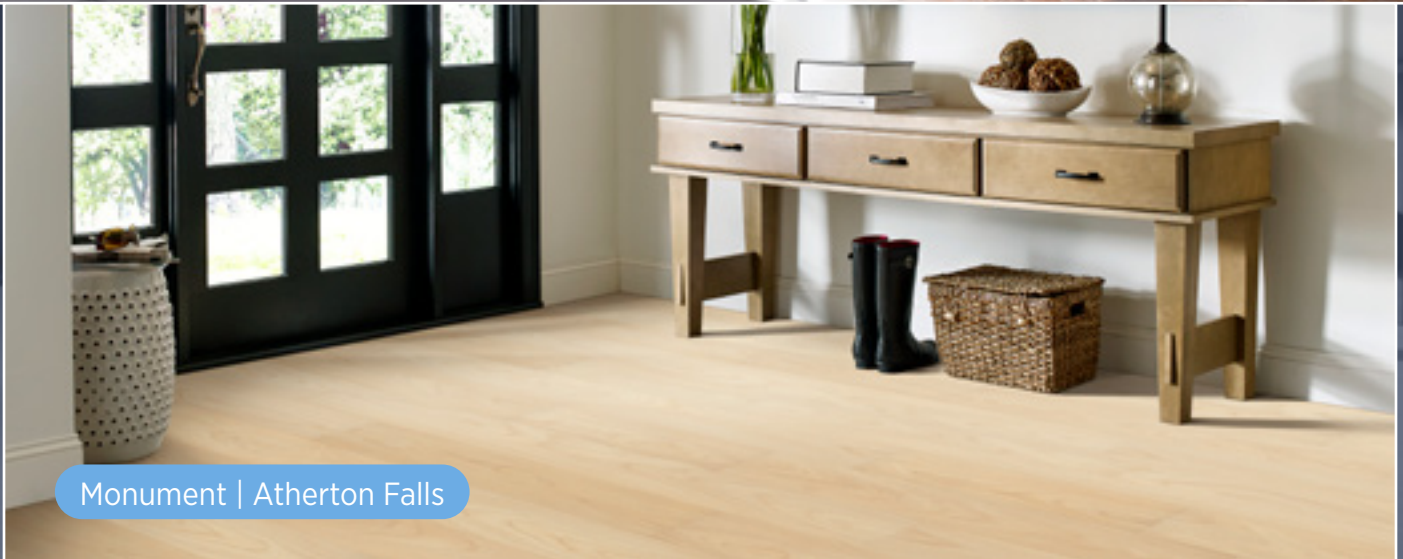

Use of the house has experienced a significant increase, resulting in a heightened importance of practicality in nearly every room. Flooring, fixtures, furniture and fabrics are being selected based on durability as much as style, ensuring items in the home can perform against the wear and tear that comes with a more casual 'lived in' lifestyle. Rooms which previously had minimal activity are now seeing frequent traffic, creating a reimagined approach to designing spaces in the home.

THE GLOBAL HOME

Fleurco | Ossia

Projections suggest there will be a resurgence of travel in 2022. While most people stayed relatively local for the last 18 months, those who have started to travel abroad describe how liberating it feels. It's probable we'll see more exotic influences in design. As international journeys begin to rise, the visions and experiences overseas will find their way into the home in the form of colors and styles. Look for it in nature-inspired flooring, bathroom retreats, kitchen gathering, and house accessories. All that's needed is a passport and imagination.

GREATER EMPHASIS ON OUTDOORS

Make a backyard, porch or even balcony a regular part of everyday life. Spending more time at home has changed the way the outside is viewed. More people are willing to invest in exterior living spaces so they can cook, entertain, relax and even work outdoors.

These spaces are becoming an extension of the interior and introduce a new way to inject personality into a home. Whether it's an outdoor kitchen, edible garden, poolside relaxation, three (or four) season room, folding and sliding doors and windows, or adding outdoor technology – bringing the inside outside is a must in 2022.

.05 PATTERNED WOOD LOOKS

Designers have recognized that interest is growing for Old World craftsmanship with two-tone designs, patterns, or even different tones. Intermingling dark and light hues underfoot can provide a room with a fun, unique appearance. Expect to see lighter hardwood flooring, whether in one room or even just part of a room.

Wood floor patterns, such as chevron or herringbone, are on the uptick and will maintain their popularity. These appearances can also be established with laminate, luxury vinyl tile and plank, and wood-look tile. Patterned flooring is not just for carpet, as wood looks are making a statement with this trend.

COLORS OF THE YEAR

Some of the best names in the paint industry announced their 2022 color of the year choices. Who says it's not easy being green? Certainly not this year's selections which have an abundance of green hues. Primarily inspired by nature, these colors provoke a sense of renewal, inspiration, serenity, rejuvenation, regrowth and calm. There is one outlier, a violet infused blue hue which is both grounded and daring.
