WE MUST ADVANCE SOCIETY TO KEEP PACE WITH TECHNOLOGY FOR A BRIGHT FUTURE IN THE STARS

For 99% of humanity's history, we relied on fantastical superstition as our only source of knowledge and guide to action. Very recently, instead of mysticism, we began applying reason to facts of reality to advance science and modern technology. However, we are struggling to do the same to advance our still primitive society. Irrationality, condescension, and paternalism remain prevalent, not inborn but out of ancient ignorance.

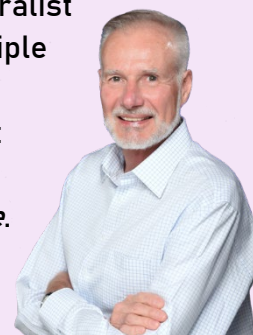

We now know that we are "rational animals." But after two recent attempts, we have yet to create an enduring society based on the fact of our nature and the individual rights that derive from it. Too many today are guided by fantasies and feelings over facts and reason, and consequently, they accept the tenets of force, sacrifice, and collectivism. And it is getting worse, not better. Technology will soon radically extend our lifespans, but this will be a curse if our free society collapses into totalitarianism.

HUMANITY'S STARSHIP IDENTIFIES SIX CRITICAL PROCESSES EXPLAINING THE HUMAN EXPERIENCE

The author applies reason to what we know about the universe's physical laws, the nature of things that exist, historical facts, and the critical thinking of specialists to isolate and identify what he calls the "Six Critical Processes." These fundamental principles answer life's biggest questions: "What is reality and the reason I exist?" "How do I know it?" "How should I live my life?" "How should people deal with each other?" "Where are evolution and technology taking humanity?" and "How do I achieve happiness?"
