

WHY CAMPING?

There's something magical about sleeping under the stars, the smell of campfires, and the sounds of night. It's an experience that awakens your senses, recharges you, and sends peace to your soul. When you camp, you invite nature to become a part of the regular rhythms of life. Waking up with the sun never fails to put a smile on your face.

Not only does camping pull you away from the hustle and bustle, it's empowering. Whether your family works together or you do it solo, setting up camp is sure to give you a sense of fulfillment. The skills you use making your space "camp ready", cooking outside, and becoming one with the land gives you a sense of accomplishment different than any other. Through the experience of really living outside, (even for a day or two!) you learn you're capable of much more than you thought!

Your home away from home feels more like home when you meet your neighbors. Campers are some of the most naturally friendly people you encounter. Need help backing up your trailer? Did you forget your canopener? Do your kids want someone to play with? Other campers tend to take care of each other and bond over their shared love of sleeping under the stars. It's a community away from your community. Making new friends is not only fun, it's a valuable life skill to you and your kids.

Camping is cheap so it's the perfect adventure and get-away for any budget. You can find free or low cost tent sites in almost any area. There's websites dedicated to it. BLM land and National Forests also often have free camping. So, for a tank of gas and the cost of groceries, you can get away for the weekend - or longer if you're up for the challenge.
