Good Job John Warren!

It was 1973, my first day on a new job. I pulled up in the parking lot with my piece of crap '63 Chevy and parking next to me was this "Fonzy" look alike guy backing in with his '55 Chevy. I look over and his windows are going up, but I don't see him cranking anything, he's just sitting there. Guess what, he has electric windows on a '55 Chevy. Then I find out he also has air conditioning. Keep in mind this is 1973, nobody would have a '55 with electric windows and AC. This fellow was named Jon Huber. A couple of years into my work there, Jon became my boss. Our business was working in a machine shop in the aerospace world, but Jon always talked cars. Our bosses, our fellow employees and all of our customers relied on Jon to help them with their car problems. It was said that if Jon opened your hood, your car would run better. You know what, I witnessed that on several occasions. Jon has since passed away, but he was one of my early mentors in life and I think about him often.

Recently I discovered another fellow that has those same qualities. He can do the "laying on of hands" on your car and it runs better. I came home from the optometrist and here is John Warren in my garage tuning up my Model T. Santa Claus had done an early delivery and John had already installed all the parts, cleaned my coils and had it running like a new car. We took it around the block and he said we needed to adjust the bands. Ten minutes later, that was done too. I now have a completely different car. It goes like hell and stops too. I did my new land speed record of 45 mph. Oh, Oh, it's supposed to be a 25mph speed limit, oh well.

Thanks John, you have the gift.

On a lighter note, there is three year old Octavius Simper, grandson of Terry & Cheryl. He comes over the other day and tells Grandma that they are getting new concrete. He tells her that concrete is the strongest thing in the world. It comes out wet and then hardens. He clenches his fist and shakes them demonstrating it's hardness. Grandma asks him how he knows all this about concrete. He tells her his Mom told him. Grandma says your Mom must be pretty smart. He says she is, but she doesn't know much about Model T's.
