

Road to Union

The union is still
under reconstruction.
We have not solved
the human crisis of slavery. Justice has become a vehicle of
social and economic
leverage to secure
special protections
and privilege.

We will not abolish slavery on narrowed concepts of justice. Rather than elevate the individual as a safeguard against injustice, we have weaponized identity and bullied privilege through fear of discriminating. The rights of individuals are of no matter to social justice. We disinherit and ridicule, silence and boast.

The limits of justice therefore blind us to the underlying sources of oppression.

Treading the surface of injustice, we ignore the underbelly of its machine. We do not stamp it out forever but reinforce the behaviors, mores, and customs on which economies of slavery depend -- where contracts “put upon” the economies of freemen the burden of “master.”

Slavery will persist as long as the edifice remains intact. Slavery will persist if groups use privilege to justify dictating the needs of others. Slavery will persist if privilege excuses the hells of good intentions. Slavery will persist if privilege delegates itself through paternalist hands of non-profit generosity. Slavery will persist if we enrich and empower the egos of masters, who require unequal footing to get a leg up.
