

One nation's terrorists...

Do you think that the majority of England's citizens back in 1776 looked on those rebellious renegades in 'The Colonies' with warm, fuzzy feelings? When Nelson Mandela joined the communist party and later co-founded the MK sabotage organization, the South African government obviously didn't applaud his actions. And when a bunch of crazies hijacked and then flew passenger jets into the World Trade Center in NYC, the US got busy punishing those responsible.

The English traitors, George Washington and his gang, are now heroes, becoming the forefathers of our country. The convicted terrorist, Nelson Mandela, is a popular model, held in highest esteem for the spread of equality in this world. And the bastards that killed thousands in New York are still celebrated in a good portion of this world. Today's terrorists might someday be revered in the future world as heroes...maybe even saints.

You don't think so?

Like most adults, I can still remember 911. I was in shock when I saw the North tower in flames, but I knew we were at war as soon as I saw that second jet hit the South tower. As a matter of fact, I called my father in California a couple minutes later, waking him up to let him know. It was a horrific day, as images forever etched in my memory, streamed across the airways.

And one of the scenes I will never forget was a video showing a crowd, somewhere in the Middle East, rejoicing at the deaths of so many infidels. It was a scene I unexpectedly relived just one year later, in Paris, on the anniversary of the 911 attacks. I happened to be out walking at midnight on the Champs-Élysées and throngs of chanting Muslims overflowing the length of the famed avenue surrounded me. They were celebrating their heroes, the hijackers that had killed so many Americans.

It sickened me. And I wondered why the French allowed such a demonstration? But France, like America, is a democracy. And such behavior, no matter how callous, must be allowed. Or does it?

France is reeling today in the aftermath of the 7 January 2015 attacks by Muslim 'extremists'. It's funny how the perpetrators of these terrorist acts are always called extremists; yet they are always able to melt right back into the Muslim community from which they came. And does it surprise anyone that was no warning from those 'moderate' Muslims that those extremists in their midst might be planning such an operation.

The French government has a real problem with the almost 5 million Muslims in their country, today all swearing that they are peaceful and denouncing the extremists they harbored yesterday. The political leaders of the French government have to act in a politically correct manner, or face the wrath of the serene, civilized world we think we live in. Don't they?

It is time for the Western world to face a terrible truth!

The world is not peaceful, nor is it civilized. A nonviolent, mass immigration of Muslims into Europe, or for that matter, of passive, job-seeking Latin Americans into the United States, is an INVASION. And you can sugarcoat it all you want, but if you cross into a country illegally, or uninvited, you are part of an invading horde. That country has every right; actually has the DUTY to protect its rightful citizens from that invasion.

I would not blame the French government if they deported every single illegal immigrant it can find. Every country has the DUTY to do the same. A country's law-abiding citizens must be protected. France must act, and must act quickly and determinedly. At a minimum, it MUST immediately disassemble the Islamic No Go Zones. And go in and 'convince' all those peaceful Islamic communities to give up the 'extremists' in their midst.

I have ABSOLUTELY NO problem with immigrants. Here in the US, we are all immigrants, unless you are Native American. My own family came over from Ireland at some point in the foggy past. But when you immigrate to another country, you have to forgo all allegiance to your former nation. You have to become a citizen of your new country. Learn its language and embrace its customs. If you immigrate to France, become French. If you immigrate to America, become American.

The invaded county must be willing to go to war to stop any invasion of its homeland, peaceful or otherwise. Just my humble, if far from politically correct, opinion.
