

Choosing Which Life to Lead, A Life of Life or a Life of Death

Since the beginning of time, mankind has pondered life. What is the meaning of life? Why am I here? What happens to me when I die?

There are those who have made it their life's work to pursue immortality pursuant to the above questions believing if they only had more time they could figure it out or perhaps they are just afraid of the unknown of death.

What if I told you that eternal life isn't something you have to seek, it's something we all have which is why we should choose wisely while in these flesh bodies. After physical death, the spirit that resides in our flesh, no longer being contained by the flesh body continues to navigate through eternity. Do you want to spend that eternity eternally blessed or eternally cursed. The choices we make while in our flesh bodies will ultimately decide what happens to our spirit and soul once this body is no longer usable.

Many believe that life is random, we are born, we go through the rat-race trying to get ahead then pass away and all for what? A span of 80+ years chasing your tail. Doesn't that seem a bit mondan?

Some people are willing to sacrifice everything in pursuit of eternal life. They spend so much time worrying about how to prolong their life that they fail to live the life they were given.

Then there are those who will give all they have to keep their body intact after they die in the hopes that one day, they will be able to be brought back to life inside a dead corpse. We will all regain our fleshly bodies in a manner of speaking. Our bodies will be made new, and those bodies will be able to transcend beyond physical limitations.

Be aware, there is a choice to be made, eternal life with God the Father and Jesus Christ or eternal damnation created by our unwillingness to have a relationship with God which leaves Him no choice but to grant our wishes of being eternally separated from His light and His love which sends us to a realm of eternal darkness and sorrow.

In all of this there is good news and there is bad news. We all live forever, where you spend that forever is up to you.

Evolution tells us we are random and evolved from nothing, Creation tells us that we were intelligently made by a creator and are the center of His everything which leads to another topic, Biblical Creation. Which takes more faith?

To believe in evolution you must believe that everything came from nothing, that two rocks in the cosmos that came from nothing, crossed paths and collided creating a colossal explosion from which everything we see around us was made.

There are a couple of questions that arise from that theory, which in my opinion take more faith than believing in a creator. Where did the rocks come from? Where did the one cell organism come from that crawled out of the primordial ooze? How did things go from being so simple to being so complex? Are there any examples of chaos ever creating perfect order? When dynamite is detonated in a building structure during a controlled demolition does it create life millions of years later?

What if I told you that you are going to live forever because you are immortal. There's no need to chase life because your current existence may end but you will never end. You were created, not by chance, but by design.

However, there is both good and bad about living forever and that is where you choose to live because that choice is not forced upon you. Your creator gives you options, he loves you no matter which you choose.

Many people who don't understand the nature of the creator will often say he is not loving, and he is mean because for no reason at all he will send those to hell that don't believe in him. That isn't really the case.

Are you one among the many of us that was either a child or have children? If so, you are completely aware that during a child's life you love them, you try to always do what is best for them, you try to protect them and teach them how to navigate life.

What if that child decides to move out and never speak to you again after all of your sacrifices and could care less what you try to do or what you try to give to make them love you. They just don't want to have anything to do with you. Would it break your heart?

Is it something you did wrong? Not necessarily, it is their choice to leave and to never see you again. God is no different. He gives each of us life and in life an opportunity to know him, an opportunity to spend time with him and to love him or to not love him. He will never force us to do anything we don't want to do.

Much like a parent, he tried. If we choose to live outside of his will for our lives, then we bring what will be for us the eternity beyond our flesh body to live separated from him. God is light, God is love, God is everything that is pure and good. The opposite of that is darkness, despair, loneliness and eternal separation from Him.

He doesn't wish that on any of us, but no different than we being parents with household rules, he is a loving father and has household rules as well. We can live outside of those rules like a rebellious teenager, or we can live in peace knowing he loves each of us and has a will for each of our lives that will lead to spending eternity with Him in heaven.

You can by all means choose to not believe the truth but that choice makes the truth no less true.
