

Pulse Talk

The Pulse Generator is moving into fall with a renewed vision for providing our services while our doors remain closed. We decided that we needed to expand our offering in order to support you, our AHS family and membership and the operation of the Pulse Generator. Our online membership “PG Fitness On the Go” gives you exclusive access to our unique, PG created, fitness and health library. We are so proud of the work that the PG Team has done and will continue to do, updating the library with new content weekly. There is nothing online that will compare to this, including the cost of $10.00/month for unlimited access. The cost of this membership will support and help sustain our very small operation until we can open our doors. This of course can only happen if you purchase this membership. As you know we are in the process of cancelling all of the current PG memberships and refunding fees. You will have to go into your Mind Body account and purchase the new “PG Fitness On the Go” membership. When we open our doors again, all “Fitness On the Go” members with a gym on site, will be offered the opportunity to upgrade their membership to include facility access. We have appreciated your support and hope that we will be able to open our doors soon.

You will notice that there are more changes on our horizon. With the launch of our online fitness, we have phased out our Facebook page and blog as our new content will be delivered through our online membership platform. If you are in need of contacting the Pulse Generator, please go to our website and complete the “contact us” or email us at pulsegen@ahs.ca.

We also say good bye to one of our long time team members, Mary Nielsen, who will be moving on to new adventures. She has had a huge impact on the success of the Pulse Generator over the years and will be missed by her fellow team members and the membership.

We are moving forward and are committed to continuing to support health and fitness initiatives within AHS across Alberta.

The Pulse Generator has provided fitness opportunities on AHS sites for over 30 years. As you know, due to the pandemic situation, our doors are closed indefinitely. We do want to open our doors again, when the time is right. We have developed a membership to help sustain our operation while our facility operation is shut down. We hope that you will purchase our online version “PG Fitness On the Go” . We have created a library of fitness offerings, mindful offerings and health and fitness information for you. As a PG Fitness On the Go member you will have exclusive access to all of these 24/7. This library will be updated weekly with brand new videos.

We hope that you will support the Pulse Generator through this uncertain time and take your workouts with you wherever you go.

The cost of the membership is $10.00/month.

Training with Tempo...Adding Variety to your sessions

Changing the pace of how you lift is a great way to change how the exercise affects your training. Slower paces can build muscle, faster can work more cardio or holds can increase strength (in those positions). Changing the pace of your exercises can unlock many ways to get results, maximize your home gym and change your routine. With that in mind, let's look at a few different concepts and what they can do for you.

The first thing we need to look at are the 3 main types of muscle contractions you will use in your workout program. They are Isometric, Concentric and Eccentric. There are other contractions but for most exercisers these are the ones you will be focusing on.

Isometric contractions are where you hold a specific position for a set period of time and the muscles neither lengthen nor shorten. Think of a squat hold as an example of isometric. Concentric contractions are when muscles shorten. Think of the biceps muscle as you do a biceps curl and the weight comes up against gravity. Finally, eccentric contractions are when muscles lengthen so when resistance comes down with gravity on a biceps curl. Each movement is important to training and changing one or all of these can add variety and results.

Isometric Holds – Building Strength and Leaning Joint Position

Holding a position either weighted or unweighted is isometric and can be an excellent way to get stronger in a certain position. Isometric holds also allow the person to feel certain joint positions. If you need to be strong in a particular position this kind of exercise can help you feel those positions and how to maintain posture. Try adding a 5 second pause in between each rep of a squats at the bottom of the squat. The legs will burn and you can get a great workout as well as working on your core positioning.

Eccentric Exercises – Increasing Strength and Learning to Slow Down

Slow lowering to a movement really challenges the movement tempo, which helps build muscle and improve strength. It also helps you to learn to absorb forces which can be beneficial for sports. By working on controlling forces, muscles must learn to store that energy and redistribute it. The slow lowering also micro tears muscle forcing it to rebuild helping with strength. Try doing a slow row for scapular control. Pull the weight in explosively but lower for 5-10 seconds.

Quick Concentric and Eccentric – Working on Your Conditioning and Speed

Quick movements are good for speed as well as conditioning. Moving fast allows us to work on power and speed, but if you do something for longer duration or multiple timed rounds it can become cardio. Think HIIT training. This type of training can work on conditioning and possibly some speed and power. Try doing times of 20 seconds of work and 10 seconds of rest for 8 – 10 minutes. If your focus is more on strength training, then try loading a weight at 50% of your 1 rep max or lower and try to get 8 reps in 9 seconds for more speed training.
