What's With The Dead Fish???

We moved to the downtown Kirkland area about 3 years ago and we remember the first time we saw 20+ dead fish washing up on our beach. We wondered if there was something spilled into the lake like fuel or sewage... or, if the lake was experiencing some unusual algae bloom.

So, 3 years ago, we called the city with our concerns and became one of the several "newbies" that they get every year.

You have nothing to worry about. In fact, it is a good thing and I imagine the more dead fish the better for the species as it would be an indicator that they are doing well.

The fish you are spotting washing up on our local beaches are adult Stickbacks and they have completed their lifecycle. As a predominant species in Lake Washington, we see them after their annual spawning that takes place usually between mid-June to early July. While some are eaten by local animals, many that wash ashore are cleaned up daily by our Parks Department and composted.
