

Racing has been part of my life for more than four decades. Along the way, I've been fortunate to experience it from nearly every side — as a racer, chassis builder and fabricator, race official, track operator, consultant, and most importantly, as a dad watching my own kids grow up at the racetrack.

RP Squared Performance grew out of those years. It began primarily as a chassis and fabrication business, building race cars and components and supplying the parts that went into them. The knowledge behind RP Squared wasn't learned from a catalog — it came from years in the shop, at the starting line, and behind the wheel.

And none of that story belongs to me alone.

Carrie has been beside me through the long nights in the shop, weekends at the track, road trips, wins, disappointments and more than a few mornings when we finally made it home as the sun was coming up. Racing became part of our family's life, and her support has been a huge part of allowing me to continue doing what I love.

Today, Carrie and I are beginning a new chapter for RP Squared Performance. We're taking the experience that once centered primarily around building complete race cars and expanding it into performance parts, components and design, fabrication knowledge, consulting and support for other racers.

The business may be growing in a new direction, but the roots haven't changed.

Racers helping racers.
