

SARANOVA SOUND

The Gulf Coast's New Voice in Clean Mobility

Founders Note: "An Invitation to Build Together"

A new year has a way of creating space. Space to reflect on what's been built, what's been learned, and what still wants to take shape.

As Saranova moves into 2026, I'm increasingly aware that this vision has never been about a company alone. It's been about people—about the conversations that stretch late into the night, the shared values that quietly align, and the trust that forms long before anything formal is announced.

This edition of SOUND is not a declaration. It's an invitation. An invitation to recognize that Saranova is being built with a community, not simply for one. If you've found yourself nodding along with these pages—believing in cleaner water, more thoughtful mobility, and a future that honors both people and place—you are already part of what we're building.

As we begin this new year, it feels like the right moment to introduce someone who embodies this spirit—not just in how he builds, but in how he listens, leads, and cares.

This edition is an invitation. And it begins with welcoming a new voice into the circle.

A NEW FACE IN THE CIRCLE

Introducing Sid Chakravarthy, Chief Technology Officer

Some people build because they love the act of creation. Others build because they want to see something exist that should exist.

Sid Chakravarthy is both.

Sid is a father, a husband, a fellow founder, and a lifelong builder. He's someone who approaches technology not as an abstract pursuit, but as a responsibility—something that should serve people, not overshadow them.

What drew me to Sid wasn't just his technical depth, or his experience navigating complex systems. It was the way he spoke about care. About building things that last. About creating platforms that respect the communities they touch.

Sid understands that technology doesn't live in isolation. It lives in homes, in cities, in ecosystems. It shapes how people move through the world—and how the world responds in return.

As a father, he's deeply aware that the systems we build today become the inherited reality of the next generation. As a founder, he knows the weight of decisions made early—and the discipline required to get them right.

Sid joins Saranova not just to architect systems, but to help steward a vision. One rooted in responsibility, humility, and the belief that innovation can be both ambitious and humane.

We're better for having him here.

THE COMMUNITY WE'RE INVITING IN

Communities aren't formed by infrastructure alone.

They're formed through care.

Through listening.

Through people who show up not because they have to—but because they believe in the work.

Saranova is becoming a gathering point for individuals who care about how technology shapes daily life, how decisions ripple outward, and how leadership can remain human even as ambition grows.

This is a community that values:

- stewardship over speed
- integrity over optics
- people over process
- and long-term impact over short-term wins

As this circle grows, it matters who steps into the room—and why.

BEHIND THE BUILD: Technology in Service of Trust

At Saranova, technology is not the headline—it's the backbone.

It's the quiet reliability that allows a system to feel effortless. The invisible architecture that supports safety, access, and trust.

With Sid's leadership, our approach to technology remains grounded in first principles:

- build with intention
- design for people
- respect the environment
- and never lose sight of why the system exists

True innovation doesn't ask communities to adapt to it. It adapts to the community.

That's the standard we hold ourselves to.

VISION CORNER

An Open Door

As this new year begins, I want to be clear about something:

Saranova is not a closed circle.

It's an open door.

If you believe in cleaner waterways...

If you care about thoughtful growth...

If you believe community and innovation can coexist without compromise...

Then you're already part of this conversation.

This year won't be about shouting louder.

It will be about listening more deeply — and inviting the right people into the room at the right time.

We're grateful you're here.
