

Quaich

This is an ancient Celtic tradition which originated in Scotland. The Quaich is a two-handed loving cup and the ritual usually takes place at the end of the wedding ceremony where the couple share their first drink as a married couple and toast their future together. The choice of tipple that is used is entirely up to the couple and you may wish to include a family member or friend by having them come forward to pour the drink for you.

There are a number of different styles you may choose and I have included some examples that my couples have used below:
