Cosmetics

As flight attendants, your appearance is crucial to your professional image, and it's important to maintain a simple yet effective skin care routine. The dry cabin air and long hours can be tough on your skin, so start with a gentle cleanser, a long-lasting moisturizer, and sunscreen to protect against UV exposure.

A quick spritz of hydrating mist during flights can keep your skin looking fresh and vibrant.

To help you master your makeup routine, I'll be preparing a special class focused on teaching flight attendants how to apply makeup that lasts throughout your shifts. We'll cover everything from creating a smooth base with primer and lightweight foundation to choosing neutral, waterproof eye makeup and long-lasting lip colors. These tips and techniques will ensure you look polished and professional all day, no matter how demanding your schedule is.
