Dolls at the Barry Art Museum

This display features a selection of historical dolls from the Barry Art Museum at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Virginia. Founded by art collectors and donors, Theodore Virginia residents Carlton K. and Rosalie F. Barry, the Museum advances the understanding of art in its many diverse forms through collecting, exhibiting, interpretation, and research. Encouraging creative and contemplative study of arts, the Museum's diverse collections reflect the varied tastes of its founders and American dolls from the eighteenth through the twentieth centuries. As these regions experienced economic technological and social change during the period, so did the production, international trade, and gifting, perceptions of childhood as a time of innocence and joy, and the doll as a lasting toy industry. The Museum interprets the dolls as works of art as well as artifacts of social history, their construction reflecting the technological, social, and cultural interests of their time.

These dolls have been placed on view at the Norfolk International Airport to celebrate the annual presentation of the United Federation of Doll Clubs (UFDC), happening July 22-28 in downtown Norfolk. Founded in 1935, the UFDC supports the artistic study, collecting, and appreciation of dolls.
