Size: 6" X 4 1/2 X 4" This camera Could Use A Good Cleaning And Service. The term "Model D" refers to the Rolleiflex 2.8D, a classic model produced around 1955-56, recognized by its classic nameplate, EVS system, and five-bladed aperture. Manufacturer: Franke & Heidecke, Medium-format twin-lens reflex (TLR) camera, producing 12 exposures of 6x6 cm on 120 roll film. Viewing Lens: Heidosmat Planar 80mm f/2.8. Taking Lens: Schneider-Kreuznach Xenotar 80mm f/2.8. Focusing: Manual focus controlled by a knob, with a depth-of-field indicator and a minimum focus distance of 1 meter. Film Transport: Crank-operated, with a built-in frame counter. Viewfinder: Waist-level viewfinder with a removable focusing hood for eye-level shooting with an optional prism. Distinctive Features: Unlike later models, the 2.8D featured the classic Rolleiflex nameplate without a meter slot and used the new Exposure Value (EVS) system. Reputation: Known for producing sharp, high-quality images and remains a popular camera for portraiture, landscapes, and street photography.

355	Elisse Pogofski-Harris Abstract Pastel flower garden - Click for Shipping Quote or free local pick up, Weight: 7 lbs. - abstract oil pastel on paper sketch of flower and grass garden, toning to paper, oil resist halo around pastel work - 11 3/4" x 17 1/4" sight, mounted under glass in 22 1/2" x27 1/4" frame - Elisse Pogofsky-Harris (1941-2018) Dreamy and surreal images, ripe with symbolism, gradually reveal to the viewer a world of multiple possibilities. Elisse Pogofsky-Harris worked mostly in oil on canvas. She spent 11 years studying and working in Italy, during which time she did aquatint etchings. Her work includes a series of paintings based on imagery found in the Old Testament, inspirations from and allusions to Japanese culture, and is strongly rooted in the iconography of classical art. In many of her works the subject is often an empty boat, a symbol that invites the viewer to enter into the picture and join the artist on her interior quest, a quest that blurs the boundaries between the concrete world and the inner world of longing, spirituality and mystery. Her work has been exhibited in the United States and abroad and can be found in both public and prestigious private collections. Elisse Pogofsky-Harris' documentation took place in 2004 and was sponsored by Paula Spellman. The FOTM Archive contains extensive information about this artist (focusonthemaster.com)

Encouraged by his father, he began drawing from nature at an early age. He was familiarly known as "Rodo" and generally signed his works "Ludovic-Rodo", or early on in his career simply "Rodo". In 1894, at the age of sixteen, Rodo published his first wood engravings in the anarchist journal, Le Père Peinard. Rodo moved into his first studio in Montmartre with his brother Georges in 1898. Works of this early important period until just after the death of his father in 1903 were post-Impressionist and clearly painted under the influence of his father. By 1904 living in Paris, he found the nightlife and the habitués of the cafes, theatres, circuses and cabarets compelling subjects for his work and changed dramatically the style of his painting, affiliating himself to the Fauve artists. Rodo became close to artists such as Kees Van Dongen, Maurice de Vlaminck and Raoul Dufy. In 1905 he participated in the first Fauve exhibition at the Salon des Indépendants. In 1907 he visited Van Dongen in Rotterdam and the two artists continued to paint together, something they often did in Paris. In 1914 he married, though he never had children. Later that year at the outbreak of the War Rodo moved to England. Over the next seven years he lived mainly in and around West London. He worked closely with his brother Lucien to establish in 1915 the Monarro Group, formed with the aim of exhibiting work by contemporary artists inspired by Impressionism. Many of the works produced by Rodo while he was in England were of London landmarks but, he was also interested in the urbanization of West London. After 1921, when Rodo had already returned to France, he divided his time between Paris and Les Andelys in Normandy, living and working closely with his elder brother Georges Manzana. Rodo's works can be found in many museums including the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford and the Museum of Fine Art in Boston.
